NATIONS TO FACE WORSE FOE YET

How Will Armies Bear the Rigors of Winter?

FACTOR IN FORMER WARS.

Has Science Reached the Point Where Cold Weather Can Be Disregarded in the Fortunes of Battle?—Few Exceptions to the Rule of Abatement of Activities in the Field.

When a new factor enters the European war—the cold of winter—the field armies will find a more persistent, a more formidable enemy than the troops of opposing nations. The first advance of winter has been felt already by the soldiers intrenched along the river Aisne. Chilly winds, following a wet week, sent a shiver through the lines of both forces.

More than anything else, says the Kansas City Star, cold weather will hamper the mobility of the armies. Their already badly taxed transport trains will have the added incubus of winter supplies. Troops will not be able to cut loose from their advanced bases even for brief periods. Shelter and warmth will have to be provided at each stop of a marching force, an ough task when millions are on the battle line.

Undoubtedly the present strife of both sides have elaborate preparation—much to keep the suffering necessarily caused by winter to a minimum, but the greatest human endurance cannot eliminate all hardship, even if an army is given a permanent station and no movement is made until spring.

Winter Dull Time in Former Wars.

Whether the science of war has progressed to the point where winter can be disregarded is a measure yet to be ascertained factor. In almost all the wars since history began the cooling of frost has heralded a period of decreasing activity by land armies, while navies has forced generals to establish permanent winter quarters, well be warmer weather before any extensive operations are resumed.

Washington had one brilliant success in the December of 1776, when by disregarding the extreme inclemency of winter and attacking the Hessians at Trenton, his army remained active several weeks after the season had set in, and ultimately was forced into inactivity. The unfortunate Al Vlyer Force gives the formidable enemy winter can be in the December of 1812, fighting practically stopped with the battle of Lutzen, Nov. 1, 1813. The Russians retired before Napoleon, and the allies gained a permanent camp of investment around it.

In our civil war considerable fighting was done in the winter months, but all the more important campaigns began in the spring and were suspended when cold weather came.

Sherman's march was made in the winter months, and even in that month, the climate is suffering from frost and snow his troops was intense. Grant commenced active operations against Fort Henry and Fort Donelson in February, 1862, and the following winter was active in Mississippi.

The intensive extreme on Moltke in 1806 was halted about the 1st of September by severe cold. Neither army was prepared to withstand winter, so for a month the opposing forces lay inactive almost within striking distance. A few encounters occurred in October, but then operations practically halted until May 10, when the Japanese army, awaited in overcoats and pudding, began to advance.

The investment of Plevna has been more effected by cold weather than the operations of field armies. The season of 1877-78 brought severe cold to the northern earth belts, where a small fire and the bodily warmth of a sound of men will keep them nearly as comfortable as in their own homes. The Japanese assault on 203 Meter hill was made on Nov. 30. Port Arthur capitulated, after a series of assaults, Jan. 2, 1905.

Wars Begun in Spring and Summer.

The war between the Balkan allies and Turkey commenced in mid-autumn, began in the fall. Most all wars have been inaugurated in the spring or early summer. The troops of Bulgaria, Servia, Greece and Montenegro started to war with countries winter like, hasty preparation, this hibernal and similar items.

The fighting in southern Europe during October was trying period on the invaders. Their descent on Turkey carried the troops into new camps each night. They rapidly became expert in making wind and rain proof huts in which bodily warmth took the place of furnaces. The soldiers belonging Adrianople and also the fleet would have to be fed by the Ottomite lines once. Constantinople remembered the lesson, stationed with needs and straw. Both of this time being was wrapped around the legs of men on duty. Cops were pulled down over the ears.

Most of the armies now in the field except the Russians and Belgians, have headdresses that fell short of adequate protection for the ears. All probably will be able to withstand cold fairly well until the first of the year, when winter will begin to make formate vicious protection is given

The Heroines.

Down in my heart live peace,
Love in the air, the stars
While the where state world is flaring
With the bloody din of the wars.

But anguish is in her heart
Who was another and wife today
And mixed in her entrance portion
Soldiers' tears are.

Around me the winds will shriek,
Or the soft south breezes blow,
But not for me can come
It drowned in the roar of the fight.

And tears shall be in her eyes
And sighs in her heart forever
Who is the bride of men's strife
At dawn the brides of sorrow.

A UNITED EUROPE AFTER THE WAR?

Possibility of the Late W. T. Stead's Dream Coming True.

WOULD MEAN LASTING PEACE

Famous English Editor and Sir Max Waechter, Founder of Europe-Unity League, Co-operated in Movement to Establish a Federation For Nations' Common Welfare.

The union "United States o Europe" is continually being mentioned in the cessions of world is going to happen after the present war is over and peace is born. Numerous would-be seers, says the New York Times, have offered themselves as believing that peace will be maintained hereafter by the United States of Europe—a federation of the nations for their common welfare and lasting peace of the continent.

If the United States of Europe becomes an accomplished fact it will mean the realization of the dream of the late William T. Stead and the enthusiasm of the late Sir Max Waechter. Unity begin, which was founded by Sir Max Waechter and was the work just before the war in furthering his project.

Mr. Stead, in using the term the United States of Europe, declared that the phrase was originally suggested by the United States of America. "The United States" were in no sense to be taken literally. He forbear to be at least thinkable." Nobody, Mr. Stead's friends said, could mistake the drift of constituting soon after a United States of Europe.

Called a Conference on Subject.

On May 21, 1912, an invitation, put forth, though a conference should be held soon after 1900, worked with Mr. Stead during the preparatory stages of the scope, the formation of the European Union was given to the world. Some of the work. In 1900 a congress was called, as Sir Max's friends say, "to bring together those who, from various nations and various points of view, had given attention to the subject, and to get into touch with the aid to the cause of federation, and to promoting the lines of the crowd."

A few months ago Sir Max made a tour of Europe and told the plan he had matured, and the conferences he had studied the difference between the nations and the unity. He found however that it was not an impossibility to bring the nations together.

Last year Sir Max estimated that the armed forces of continental Europe fix 000,000,000 yearly, declaring that all expenditure was motivated by this expenditure. In discussing the question of armaments he made a prophetic forecast of the future. "Peace, security, and relief from militarism in a mighty degree.

Once the great means of the population of the United States, and constructed that a federation of European nations would be established at once they could be educated up to appreciate the benefits of peace, declared Sir Max thought that the United States of Europe might be the most enlightened force.

Advantages of a United Europe.

After his investigations all over Europe Sir Max was thoroughly convinced that one of the great steps would be taken would be the reduction of the tariff walls between nations, and that the next step would be disarmament. He said he believed that this would be difficult to achieve, as the nations would be temporarily difficulty. Of the advantages of federation he said that they were many.

"What the unity of Europe is fruitful activity," he declared, "would become impossible. The excessive burden of armaments would be necessary and would gradually disappear. Commerce and industry would flourish as they would become more plentiful. Free trade between the United States of Europe would result in German trade increasing by leaps and bounds. Salaries and wages would rise.

"For not only could hundreds of millions of pounds be saved, but the money on ornaments be saved and be applied to productive and productive purposes, but the productive power of mill would be increased. The saving would their time in military drill would be available for productive labor in producing the things required by mankind.

SWORDS AND PLOWSHARES.

Bryan Memorials Turn Inevitably Prophetic.

Bentism has been given by Secretary of State Bryan to the world. Its followers shall beat their swords into plowshares. Its apostles have preached and abhored the swords, and between times, as the Secretary Bryan had been loud in his denunciation of the sword, he has become a brother of a minister alone one of three-quarters of a million of the Christian Endeavorers who have been asked to remind him of his meeting. It is made from a real sword too—a sword that has seen service.

But no for the plowshare. It isn't a sad big plowshare. It's just a saint sure steel plowshare, silver plated, intended to be used as a pojrawelds. The ministers and ambassadors are getting the blades of the swords and the spears of the world's fighting hosts prepared for the senate foreign relations committee.

FATHER FOUGHT WITH NAPOLEON

Confederate Veteran Dies at Mt. St. Mary's where he Had Taught for Forty Five Years. Life of Great Activities.

Dr. Ernest Lagarde, for 45 years professor of English literature and modern languages at Mt. St. Mary's College, Emmitsburg, died Sunday after a brief illness.

Prof. Lagarde was born at New Orleans, and was of historic French origin, his father having served as an aid officer of the army of the first Napoleon. He was educated at College Hill, Mass., and at the University of Louisiana. He received the degree of LL.D. from Georgetown University.

During the Civil War he served in the Confederate Army as a member of the Crescent Regiment of New Orleans. After the war he engaged in various newspaper enterprises, editing the Whig and the Age in Richmond, Va., and subsequently was associate editor of the Magnate, the Mirror, the Courier and the Bee, all of New Orleans. Later he became professor at Notre Dame University and modern languages at Mt. St. Mary's College in 1869.

Professor Lagarde was married in 1861 to Louise LaForgue, of New Orleans, who survives him together with three sons, Ernest, of Junction, Louis, of New Orleans, and John B., of Junction, Ala., and one daughter, Alice, wife of Chevalier Ferrato.

He was a member of the Sons of the Revolution, and of the United Confederate Veterans.

The funeral was held from the college church Tuesday morning at 8 o'clock.

LOST TO LEBANON

Gettysburg Elevens no Match for Strong Valley Team.

The Gettysburg College foot ball team more than met these equals on Saturday when it beat the strong Lebanon Valley eleven on Nicolas Field and was rewarded by the score of 24 to 9. The visitors showed superior form in every department of the game. Even the Gettysburg line they dashed with the greatest ease and it was seldom that the locals held them for downs.

Gettysburg, on the contrary, was weak in the offense as in the defense and only one or two well accented forward passes showed any redeeming features.

Lebanon Valley scored a touchdown in the first few minutes of play by straight foot ball and a forward pass. In the second period a goal from the field and a safety ecored by a pass over Sinsabaugh yielded five more for points.

The second half opened with Gettysburg showing some spirit and a forward pass to Turnbull yielded six of the points. Another pretty goal from the field later but Lebanon crossed the Gettysburg goal for a scoring the last two periods. Only one goal was kicked from a touchdown. While the one visitors' strength was well known before they came here and a victory is seemed doubtful, by the game it was believed that Gettysburg would put up a game fight prior to that which she displayed Saturday.

KILL SQUIRRELS OF GOVERNMENT

Little Animals Shot by the Dozens Near Culp's Hill. Wander off Battlefield Reservation in Search of Water.

The killing of a large number of squirrels from governmental ground has been announced a fruitless and unnecessary to the opinion of experts who have charge of the National Park and Military Park. Arrangements for exterminating the squirrels were made in some way to prevent the continued slaughter which is made possible by the animals leaving the property of the Park Commission in search of water.

The long continued drought took from the squirrels some of their watering places on the battlefield and they were forced to look elsewhere for their supply. In their search they found small ponds nearby and daily went there to drink. Unfortunately, this was discovered and, when the squirrel season opened residents went there and simply waited with gun in hand until the little gray squirrels appeared. Then they mowed away and in a short time had the pile allowed by the law and left to return the next day.

It is said that, from the Culp's Hill section alone, no less than fifty or sixty squirrels have been killed in this way, and that is a goodly proportion of all the game on the one side of the hills.

Just how the slaughter is to be prevented is not known, unless the hunters themselves will observe the regulations by their continual shooting. As the killing is on the government reservation ground it is regarded as doubtful whether the Park Commission can make legal steps, even though they might claim ownership of the animals. But ownership of the game might later be difficult to claim.

In view of the great care exercised in preserving game on the battlefield, the efforts to provide the squirrels with water and keep them from carrying outs off their sources of supply, are being made to check the slaughter with the proper animals, it would seem that the squirrels will be wiped out in a short while.

All Around The Farm

SHADE FOR THE FARMHOUSE.

Trees Are Necessary Both For Beauty and Comfort's Sake.

(Prepared by United States department of agriculture.)

The importance of shade trees around the farmhouse is most frequently overlooked in the opinion of specialists in the United States department of agriculture. In selecting the site for a farmhouse, the best site is usually chosen, possible to choose one where shade is already to be had in the form of native trees. Sometimes the trees are only a few hundred feet apart.

Germans Excel English In Language

One of the greatest needs of the allies is interpreters for both the English and French armies, says the London Standard correspondent. "When I have been in ordinary and unusual manoeuvres this last week we have had to make pacemate go in front on guides and have been absolutely at their mercy, with only the fear of our rifles to deter them from leading us straight to the Germans. Little Stories of Interest From the Scene of War In Europe.

THROUGHOUT much of the war, before the battle and trench, the intrenched lines of the German and the allied armies so approach each other so closely that the sentries on guard duty in the trenches can observe quietly the movements of the men opposing them. Sometimes the enemies are only a few hundred yards apart.

In regard to this a lieutenant of an English regiment at Wytschaete, in Chaughtney, told a war correspondent that a week of his company had only finished cooking dinner late at night. LONDON AWAITS AERIAL INVASION

Takes Precautions to Repel Attack by Zeppelins.

GERMANS READY FEBRUARY.

Will Need Four Months' Time For Preparation of Fleet of Dirigibles. "Wait and See," Says Inventor—Zeppelin Has Been Greatly Upward, Prevalent in British Capital.

Information received in Amsterdam from an authoritative source regarding Germany's aerial plans throws a new light on the action of the London authorities in doing away with all bell-fitted illuminations, sweeping the skies with searchlights and mounting anti-aircraft guns on nearly all bellows and prominences. These precautions are thoroughly justified, though in popular opinion, they are the result of some correspondent in Amsterdam.

While correspondent in a city by no means on London's account, it Germany's plans, and that the Zeppelin dirigible, ground model is about to be launched, will number a hundred and twenty of the zeppelins, for they can only sail by night.

Germany's Aerial Equipment.

An American refugee from Germany, who reached London six weeks ago, is Austria, Germany and Holland, told the correspondent at the time that at the flying field at Berlin he had seen at least 50 zeppelins and fifty Zeppelins in their sheds.

When the Germans officer interviewed was asked if there was any truth in the statement that Germany had fifty Zeppelins in her sheds he replied positively:

"There is nonsense. But we are working on new Zeppelins night and day and by February we shall be ready to start.

Confirmation—if a sort—of the pimpsed aerial attack on London came from the Count Zeppelin himself. He returned to his home in Stuttgart, Wurtemberg, on the first day of last week.

"Give Us Time," Says Zeppelin.

An American woman saw the count in Berlin and, wishing to do him, as the head of the German air fleet, a compliment, said:

"I hope you will succeed politely, replying:

"Wait and see. Only give us time, madame."

"Zeppelin neck" is the form of militancy now prevalent in London, according to the Lancet.

This is the popular term for stiff neck, which is supposed to have arisen at this season because so many Londoners are scanning the skies in search of the bombs or the government searchlights expected momentarily to fall or the enemy.

WATCH BRINDILLA CASE.

Washington and London Deeply Interested in Source of Oil Stop.

If the Brindilla case ends in the oil trust ship formerly the Washington, there is considerable interest in the international complication, but alleged contraband of war, which, if the decision does, it will be appealing to a principle which has been established in British and British law never forcefully applied. There is no question that the cargo was consigned to Germany, as when both Berlin and the United States the British consul at the Netherlands of Paris, though neither had notified it. The case is attracting much attention in Washington and London.

The Brindilla was a ship of the Standard Oil company, and her recently caught in New York by the war She was bound for Rotterdam with a cargo many naphtha and other petroleum products. Outside the three mile limit she was stopped by a British war vessel and the jurisdiction of a prize court.

The British contention, briefly stated, is that the transfer of an oil cargo from the ship of one nation to that of another does not change the character of the cargo. It is proved that such transfer is not to be made in order to evade consequences to which an enemy's vessel, or the cargo of such vessel, would be liable, and that the burden of proof of good faith is put upon the claimant of the cargo. Such is the law also.

The British contention, December, 1911, caused a naval prize not recent case of the Pindos, which the British seized. The lords rejected it. Yet it has passed by usage into the common law of nations, was embodied in declarations by Russia and Italy during the Tripoli war and is admitted in principle by the present belligerents. If on appeal it takes from the prize court to The Hague this principal is bound by the convention establishing it to decide in accord with international law, or to do "recognized rule" exists, to follow the general principles of justice and equity."

Each of the numbers will not be in commission before February. The fleet will be being tested now at special sentries camps, and at least one of the dirigibles will be in London as recently as last spring.

Germans Ready For Battle.

The unanimity of the German people is one of the chief factors of German efficiency in the war. The allies need absolutely all this unanimity. The German gets just one suffering for lack of lemon. The British soldiers have hardly any soldiers speak even serviceably French. Over and over again I have myself been deliberately misled by apparent interpreters who, I felt sure, were German spies."

Queer Dress at the Front.

While correspondent in a city by no means on London's account, it Germany's plans, and that the Zeppelin dirigible, ground model is about to be launched, will number a hundred and twenty of the zeppelins, for they can only sail by night.

Germany's Aerial Equipment.

An American refugee from Germany, who reached London six weeks ago, is Austria, Germany and Holland, told the correspondent at the time that at the flying field at Berlin he had seen at least 50 zeppelins and fifty Zeppelins in their sheds.

When the Germans officer interviewed was asked if there was any truth in the statement that Germany had fifty Zeppelins in her sheds he replied positively:

"There is nonsense. But we are working on new Zeppelins night and day and by February we shall be ready to start.

Confirmation—if a sort—of the pimpsed aerial attack on London came from the Count Zeppelin himself. He returned to his home in Stuttgart, Wurtemberg, on the first day of last week.

"Give Us Time," Says Zeppelin.

An American woman saw the count in Berlin and, wishing to do him, as the head of the German air fleet, a compliment, said:

"I hope you will succeed politely, replying:

"Wait and see. Only give us time, madame."

"Zeppelin neck" is the form of militancy now prevalent in London, according to the Lancet.

This is the popular term for stiff neck, which is supposed to have arisen at this season because so many Londoners are scanning the skies in search of the bombs or the government searchlights expected momentarily to fall or the enemy.

WATCH BRINDILLA CASE.

Washington and London Deeply Interested in Source of Oil Stop.

If the Brindilla case ends in the oil trust ship formerly the Washington, there is considerable interest in the international complication, but alleged contraband of war, which, if the decision does, it will be appealing to a principle which has been established in British and British law never forcefully applied. There is no question that the cargo was consigned to Germany, as when both Berlin and the United States the British consul at the Netherlands of Paris, though neither had notified it. The case is attracting much attention in Washington and London.

The Brindilla was a ship of the Standard Oil company, and her recently caught in New York by the war She was bound for Rotterdam with a cargo many naphtha and other petroleum products. Outside the three mile limit she was stopped by a British war vessel and the jurisdiction of a prize court.

The British contention, briefly stated, is that the transfer of an oil cargo from the ship of one nation to that of another does not change the character of the cargo. It is proved that such transfer is not to be made in order to evade consequences to which an enemy's vessel, or the cargo of such vessel, would be liable, and that the burden of proof of good faith is put upon the claimant of the cargo. Such is the law also.

The British contention, December, 1911, caused a naval prize not recent case of the Pindos, which the British seized. The lords rejected it. Yet it has passed by usage into the common law of nations, was embodied in declarations by Russia and Italy during the Tripoli war and is admitted in principle by the present belligerents. If on appeal it takes from the prize court to The Hague this principal is bound by the convention establishing it to decide in accord with international law, or to do "recognized rule" exists, to follow the general principles of justice and equity."

GET GOOD HALL IN OLD SCHOOL

Post Office will Move From Gettysburg to Harrisburg Interest, Safe Blown and Cash and Stamps worth Several Hundred Removed.

Yeggmen early in the morning broke into the safe in the post office at Grantham,which is also the postoffice, unmasked the safe, and escaped with over $200 in money and stamps. Grantham is located on the Reading railroad between Gettysburg and Harrisburg.

Yeggmanism has been sent to the State police headquarters and it was expected that several officers would begin the work of trailing the men. A meager description is at hand, the men are said to be strangers and to have made to locate the men.

Residents of the town heard a muffled report. A train was passing at the time bound toward Harrisburg and this partially concealed the noise of the explosion. D. O. Shelly, who lives near the post office, heard it and was shortly afterward last at the scene. He was of the opinion that it was only persons returning from a party which had been held that night.

Entrance had been made by breaking in the rear door of the store and unlatching the window.

After entering the men had gone to the safe, located in the rear of the store, and after working it with blasts and a hammer which were left behind, succeeded in getting about $50 in money with all of the stamps had been taken. These amounted to several hundred and considerable damage was caused to the safe. Nothing was heard of the explosion and the large plate glass window in front being shattered.

CROPS AND THE WEATHER.

Importance of Agricultural Meteorology to the Farmer.

The practical aim of agricultural meteorology is to secure the most complete adjustment possible between the weather and the crop, and the first step in this process is to obtain as accurate knowledge as possible of the conditions.

Since the experiment stations can make of a small plot of land on which to conduct experiments for only a few years after year, according to some estimates, it would require the work of millions of stations to satisfy adequately the demand for information in the weather. Our Shadow.

Everyone of us casts a shadow. There hangs above us a sort of pendulum—a strange, indefinable something—which we call the personal influence, which has its effect on every other life on which it falls. No man with no influence we go. It is not something we can have when we will, as we lay aside a garment. It is something that always goes with us, for better, for worse, and whether we will or no. It is something we can not help, but it is something we can help to make better.

ANNOUNCE NEW SPECIAL OFFER

Last Offer so Successful for Contestants, and so Many Requests are Received for Another, that Management Makes One More.

On account of the great success with which all contestants worked during the last special offer, and because of so many requests for another offer, we have decided to make one more big opportunity for the hustlers in the Prize Contest a chance for a big prize. This offer is bigger and better in almost every way than the last one, and it will be the most important factor in the whole campaign.

On every club of NEW subscriptions, amounting to twenty five dollars that is turned in by or for any contestant before Saturday, November 7th, no extra work will be required and three thousand votes will be allowed. These subscriptions may be in either Two Years or to the New Year, and of any length on which votes are allowed by the regular rate. There is no limit set as to the number of these offers that any contestant will be allowed. It is open as many as they can secure sets of NEW subscribers.

Now, if you want to win a prize, contestants, either make up your mind to be a real contestant, or drop out. Working in a half hearted manner will never win a prize, and will only lead to a disappointment in the end. Make up your mind that you are going to take full advantage of this offer, and not be satisfied with one or two of the extra ballots that it is possible for you to get.

No matter how little you may have done previous to this time you can get to on this offer and place yourself in the front rank. Do not be afraid of the warnings, to avoid the penalty prescribed by law, appear in the newspapers.

It is doubtful if there was ever such a voluntary response to the call as the county spinster promiscuous hunting season. Only a few days remain, when the farms contain a goodly percentage of "rabbit ground" the traveling will be fine. Everybody has a time to find every place protected by the game laws. Yards investigated are so completely posted that the hounds can find very little chance for sport.

The action of the farmers is not for the purpose of keeping the country bare in every township there are those who do not allow the gunners to be shooting on their farms.

And the real people claim they have a good reason for so doing, as they may appear selfishness. In years past the farmers were subject through the destruction of fences. Thoughtless hunters would climb over fences without stopping for a moment to repair any damage they may have done. Gates were left open, and the out of pure mischief, have shot domestic animals. Farmers complain that the hunting on their land has almost resulted in injury to members of their families, instead of shots.

Most farmers do not object to the careful hunter using his land for gunning purposes. They have a trouble more than enough game for everybody but the farmer wants to pick the people who will be allowed to carry over farm. As a result there are many who will find their privileges curtailed to hunters to hunt on their land if a request for permission is made.

This license to gun was out of every hunter is serving as a quick means of identification to the owner and most farmers take kindly to that privilege and will be accommodating. Meanwhile those who seek the "No Trespassing" protection of the paper will find the walk of enforced pedestrianism signs increase.

The rabbit season opens next Monday.

MAKE QUICK TRIP OVER THE COUNTY

Democratic Candidates for United States Senate and Governor, with Others, Speak at Many Places. Gettysburg is Included.

A. Mitchell Palmer, Vance C. McCormick and other state candidates on the Democratic ticket arrived in Adams County at 8 o'clock Friday morning for a day's tour to a number of the towns. Gettysburg was reached by noon, and the party had time for three meetings during their brief visit.

Cashtown was the first stop on the tour of Adams County. Mr. Palmer and Mr. McCormick are accompanied by Dr. William T. Ellis, of Swarthmore, and by Mr. Mc Clarke, candidate for congressman-at-large. They came from Franklin County and were met at Cashtown by a delegation of forty local Democrats in fourteen automobiles. Congressman Brodbeck was included in the welcoming party. Meetings were held in Cashtown, Arendtsville and Biglerville. Both Mr. Palmer and Mr. McCormick spoke at all three places, and had audiences of from 100 to 200 at each town.

The record of Mr. Palmer's addresses was mainly the legislation which the Democratic senate passed during the session of Congress, and he enumerated all of the principal measures. He also touched lightly on the Wilson administration, urged its support, and declared that a vote for a pine for the re-election of Congressman Brodbeck as an indication of the approval of the work of the present administration.

SAVES HER BARN FROM INCENDIARY

Widow who Lost Three Story Building Last Winter as Result of Firebug, Narrowly Escapes Another Loss. Found in Time.

Evidently the object of spite on the part of an unknown enemy, Mrs. Mary L. Wolford, of Mt. Mor, is suffering as the result of several attempts to burn her property.

Last winter her three story cottage containing some thirty rooms, was burned to the ground, the fire originating on the second story of the premises in the absence of the family. This fire was plainly incendiary, as Mrs. Wolford and her son, the only inmates of the house, occupied apartments on the first floor and the upper floors were unoccupied. No clues, however, came to light. Mrs. Wolford rebuilt and since the first of August has been occupying the new cottage on the site of the old home.

On Friday night her enemy was abroad again and at the old conspiracy to destroy her property. During her absence her stable was fired but not for the mere accident of her arrival home soon after the blaze started, her barn would have been in ashes with ten head of horses, a lot of chickens, a valuable house dog, a new falling top buggy, a lot of hay, feed, der and corn and an equipment of gears, harness and farm implements.

Mrs. Wolford and her son arrived home about 8:30. As she and son neared the top of a hill right hill on the Pine Run road on which her cottage stands, they espied a bright light in the buggy shed attached to the barn. They hurried to the scene and found a very vigorous blaze lapping at the front door on the inside. They quickly procured buckets and by heroic efforts succeeded in quenching the flames, it was an exceedingly close call, as in another five minutes the whole barn would have been a roaring furnace of flame.

On closer examination they found that a pile of straw had been placed in front of the door on the inside and had been saturated with oil.

Mrs. Wolford has a very well grounded suspicion as to the guilty parties and believes they are the same scoundrels who looked her chicken houses on a number of occasions in recent years. She is making a quiet investigation and feels hopeful of being able to run down the guilty parties.

How a Curate's Daughter Became a Machioness

By EDITH V. ROSS

(The day when the Marquis of Bailywhose name is known to all the world for its sins to a well from which a girl drew water. Hester Dennington, by next toward her and asked her for a drink. She told him that she would be happy to give him one, but there was no cup at hand. The marquis said that he would not drink from the well, at this the girl made a gesture, took off her hat and presented it to the lover, as much as to say, "It's no fit thing for a gentleman to drink from." Then, smiling a cup of her two hands, she filled them with water and drank. She filled them with the cool water and offered the marquis a drink from the improvised cup.

Though the girl was just a country lassie, her hands were beautifully shaped, and while the marquis was drinking he looked up into her two liquid eyes and drank of the soul he found there as well as of the water which is her hands. Not a great deal of water, for the girl's hands are small and not enough to quench the thirst of a man who had walked miles in the hot sun quite drank a number of times from the girl's improvised receptacle, and when he looked into the girl's eyes till at last he drank from them.)

When he was ashamed to drink any more he left a horse in a field close by, drew, mounted his horse and rode away. The girl stood looking after him till he reached the crest of a rise in the road, when he turned, threw her a kiss from the tips of his fingers, then descended the opposite slope and disappeared.

Hester Dennington was not old enough not refrain from thinking of the man, but she felt that he was certainly deserving of the nutrush. But it was a long while before she saw him again.

There was war between landlord and tenant in those times, and the feeling was in consonance. A landlord riding to his castle was not likely to meet a tenant riding an unknown visitor was found to be a friend, he was not likely to be a friend long.

Hester, in the height of the trouble between landlord and tenantmen, was riding to her home one evening when she took occasion to see a figure step from the hedge and bar her way. She drew rein and looked at him in front of him. On account of the darkness she could not see his face clearly, and, drawing a pistol from his holster, she demanded that he get out of the way of the road.

"Don't shoot," came a woman's voice, spoken in a low tone. "I'm here to warn you."

"Who are you?" asked the marquis, for he knew that that must be the sign of her two hands for you to drink from. "I don't see you. Where are you?"

"Pass the field and go into your pave to the river and see."

"Why should I do that?"

"Do as I tell you. I have good for you to tell you."

The marquis rode no reply to this for a few minutes. He was thinking. Presently he said:

"I am armed. Why should I be turned from the road to my own estate by a man on the front?"

"Because you'll see no enemy. They're your friends!"

"Then I'll do it," the time was steaming over near the surprise. Reining down, he turned his horse's head into his horse in the field, as she had advised, and, riding to the river, he found himself in four gate. As he was doing so he heard a shout from Mr. and Mrs. Bringham in the road. It was too dark for him to see what was going on there, but the sound of the field he heard a mere whisper. Then he heard a shot, and a cry of pain which he had entered. Then he caught the sound of a horse's hoofs galloping away in the road. It was a woman.

"Matilda—Ed!" he cried.

He did not know the name, but he supposed he was right. He rode back up to the gate and tied only a few minutes when he heard his little boy wounded son. He did not doubt that she had shot the husband and wife.

Taking he up in his arms, he carried him to the house and found that they had been across the field, towards the river, and had been shot by a man who had been on a house and sent one of his servants for a doctor. The boy had received his by a shotgun and stunned, but he was not dangerously injured. When he had happened, she said that the man who had been shot was in wait for the marquis came as the ground a little in front of the gate and fired at the man. Finding Kathleen and assuming that she had shot her husband, she fled, but the other had later. Hester thought that the man who would have been a fatal blow. Hearing a shot and a scream and not knowing what she was approaching, they had made off in the direction of the river.

Kathleen was the daughter of a curate in a servant maid had loved the son of her brothers, assuming to his father's consent. But the interference of the latter had thus taken place to prevent the marriage.

Kathleen was not able to leave the house where she was cared for for some time, and, when she did, the marquis was approaching they had made off to the house with the former, far from their

PLAN TO REOPEN STOCK EXCHANGES

British and American Financiers Seek Method.

THEY WANT US TO PAY GOLD

Balance Against United States in Favor of Britain Exceeds $200,000,000. We Have Metal to Liquidate Obligations—Treasury Expects Action Officially in Way of Saving So.

In view of business conditions in the United States American bankers met with bankers from the British government wants to have the London Stock Exchange reopened as soon as possible. Its views in that connection are being made a subject of discussion in Washington with Sir George Paish and Basil P. Blackett, the representatives of the British chancellor of the exchequer now in Washington. Mr. Blackett is the official principally lead to consideration of the opening of quarters and other items.

From what was said in well informed quarters the business men generally feel that the matter would be taken up by the two governments for the synchronous opening of the London and New York exchanges, which had the opening of the British and French bourses. The underlying idea in that if exchanges on both sides of the Atlantic are reopened the tendency will be to restore normal conditions, and that this will be particularly true if the gold is sent dealings in cotton.

Discussions over the international financial and business situation were held between the British and American experts. President Wilson, Secretary McAdoo and other members of the federal reserve board. These conferences lasted all day and were followed by a visit of the British financial commissioners to the treasury department to make an authorized statement of the British position and of American obligations in the British Britons Want Us to Pay.

Generally outlined, the British attitude is that the United States must send to the United States treasury at least $200,000,000 in gold to liquidate the admittedly unfavorable condition to pay what they owe to the United States. The British government does not undertake to say that it will not pay, but only on the part of the United States that it will not be necessary for it to pay in British possessions. The Bank of England, with a comparatively small store of gold, is handling greater financial responsibilities than the British representatives. The business against the United States is so great that the bulk sales amounts to between $200,000,000 and $300,000,000 a week, through the climate of Sir George Paish, and the British representatives are convinced that it difficult to say why, with all the gold that would be sent to the United States, should not be liquidated easily within a few months, if not weeks, by the country.

Objections to the British Plan.

The United States authorities answer that the British plan is impracticable while the United States has large gold reserve there are conditions which make it impossible for this country to settle the entire balance in the metal.

The argument has been advanced to the effect that the necessity for doing a gold reserve in the treasury is not available for this use, that it is standing against gold certificates which are now being issued in the large way in which it could be used would be to-day's business. Another answer of the gentlemen. Furthermore, the New York banks, upon which the foreign exchange, have no gold to spare, their reserve ratios are low, and the situation is a considerable extent

It is pointed out that American authorities, it would seem that the United States could not be asked to settle the obligations with England in gold because there is no practicable method that was employed in the issuance of the $100,000,000 gold for the promotion of foreign exchange

The British plan is for a voluntary subscription by the banks of the country, and Washington officials expect that would be made to raise $200,000,000 or $250,000,000 for shipment to London.

Mexico That Holds True.

"Mexico has not lost its head" was a maxim which never fell upon disuse. That was / could notice stamped for rather than enforcers, as we look backward, is but natural. The craving for well-cooked food is wholesome, and if the palate grows more delicate as the appetite becomes more jaded, the change is not peculiar to this country or time. As in poetry, so in food, the love of simplicity is the proof of a golden, if primitive, age.

Gunpowder and Dynamite.

While both gunpowder and dynamite are explosives, they fall into different classifications. Gunpowder, which is a nitrate mixture, whereas dynamite is a nitro compound. GIRARD COLLEGE BOYS' BIG TIME

Have Genuine Enjoyment during their Stay in Gettysburg. March through Streets. Play Mock Foot Ball Game. Other Fun.

Those sixty Girard College boys had the time of their young lives in Gettysburg Friday evening, when, followed of their strict discipline of the Philadelphia institution, they were allowed to enjoy themselves to the full.

First in their program of amusement was a visit of the town and the present lolly pop and, armed only with their fife and drum corps, they marched up the Lutheran building where they viewed the great battle picture with considerable interest, failing to town they found an hour's fun at a local moving picture house and then did further manoeuvering, forming in a column and parading over the various streets.

Centre Square was their main area of activity and was the scene of a mock foot ball game. The boys divided into two parties, the youngsters during the only hours of the night bat their dolls, and line on each side and then as on "rough house", as one of them recalled.

On Sat. morning they returned to Philadelphia, having had a visit to the enrollment of about 1500 boys. No monster or elegrams is permitted at the school, but the boys have a very religious linea being in the form of lectures by men of prominence.

One of the best orders received by the Auburn Shale Brick Company recently was one secured last week calling for 100,000 of the finest Pressed Brick that they have yet had to be used in the construction of a Baltimore residence the estimated cost of which is $100,000.

The bricks to be shipped will be of the finest quality, the company which have recently come into such great popularity and for which the local plant has received considerable notice. The bricks made here are said to compare most favorably with any her bricks from other plants and inspection have been received from many sections, indicating a big market for the product.

Included in the shipments to be made to Baltimore are 5000 special Red-tinted bricks of different shapes. They are all to be beveled edged and in the water courses about the foundations, special shapes also being made for the corners of the house. She was the only child of Mr. and Mrs. Ephraim Miesight, who for a number of years conducted a confectionery store on Chambersburg street, in the building now occupied by M. S. Tobe. As a clerk in her father's store, at one time one of the best patronized business places in the town, Mrs. Young made a wide circle of acquaintences but she was best known through her connection with the local post office.

Mr. Young became postmaster in 1898 and soon afterward she took up the duties of stamp clerk in the office. This position she held for fourteen years, resigning in 1912, and during that time made hosts of friends through her uniform courtesy and kindness to the patrons of the office. Not long after entering her connection at the post office she removed to Pittsburgh. Her husband died in October 1907 and she leaves no near relatives.

The funeral will be held in Gettysburg on Saturday morning. The body will be taken to the Lutheran Cemetery immediately after the arrival of the Reading train at 9.15. Rev. J. B. Baker, pastor of St. Annes Lutheran church will conduct the services at the cemetery.

BLUFFING IN A DUEL.

"Laddy" Put Up a Brave Front, Though He Was Really Scared.

During his early diplomatic career while he was stationed in the embassy in Stockholm Henry Lehmann-Sparre fought a duel.

"There was a want of logic about the entire proceeding that went to my heart," he confessed later. "By no kill-or-cure process, had he to be killed and to do it in a hurry. I never felt more dismal in my life."

Paradoxical the combat certainly was, since Lehmann-Sparre had been the challenger, his ground of offense being that his antagonist, an American officer, had presumed to criticise the British attitude in the Boer war and had even the nerve to call a fellow officer who, disapproving of his views, had vocally declined a challenge from nonetheless arrogant fire-eater, a "damned Englishman with spirit that his chief and beloved country had flouted." Lehmann-Sparre was so silly as to fight duels, and left the next to his second and found himself pledged to fight the next morning with pistols at 10 paces. He had leaped first as apology, and mistake he was disagreed, but he did not allow his feelings to be divined, and duly sank his apprehension upon the field of honor.

"The American stood apart; I stood apart. The empire-builder eyed me as a 'subject.' The cocktails nourished; then the pistols were stepped out at twelve paces. He had very short legs, and they seemed to me shorter than ever. After this came the loading of the pistols. Sometimes, I thought, seconds do not put in the bullets. That cannot be the case, for a second, when for the bullets were removed down with cheerful gusto. By his time we had been placed facing each other. A glass was set on the top of me. 'I am to give the signal,' said the Prussian. 'I shall count one, two, three, and then at the word five you will both fire. Gentlemen, are you ready?' We both nodded. 'One, two, three, five!' and both our hands went off. No bone had been drawn.

He thought it was all over, even his opponent, steeling up, remarked that he supposed it was time to allow him a second shot, but, should nothing come of it, he would not consent on a third.

Relentlessly on the part of both participants a second shot was fired, and that both missed—it indeed either had aimed. Greatly relieved, they both declared a third shot.

The seconds united together. For a moment I feared they were going to treat me as a child, but they were greatly relieved when they informed me they considered that honor alone on my side sufficed. I was delighted, but I pretended to be hugely annoyed and to take the favor of being so sacrificed personally."

The whole affair was certainly farcical, but the Prussian code of honor leaves nothing to be desired.—London Telegraph.

It Is Indeed.

In these days of the high cost of living the human story is not without a decided point.

The tourist of a primary class was trying to show the children the difference between wood and coal and made wonders and was dazzled by hard.

"What," she asked, "do you think is the most wonderful thing a man ever made?"

A little girl, whose parents were obviously harassed by the question of society wars and social rivalries as well as the proverbial Joneses, replied, "A living for his family."—Women's Home Companion.

Electricity and the Human Body.

The anesthetic means were made by means of a sensitive galvanometer, the current passing through the body of the subject from one hand to the other.

Growing Out.

Growing out is a process from which there is no escape, because the characters in our bodies are so constituted that they must inevitably undergo it. Old age is healthy without in our declares from the moment liner cease into decay. The dying up which marks it begins when we stop growing and become more sure how much the sea-ser we approach death.

IMPORTED SEED PRICES.

Crimson Clover and Many Vetch Seed Rise Upward Tendencies.

Prices for imported crimson clover and hairy vetch seed have recently shown such a marked upward tendency that specialists of the United States department of agriculture find that the cost of these seeds, of which Europe is the chief source, will interfere very much with the increased use of this leguminous clover crops. In fact, it is feared that the prices will be so high that these loads a way go so high as to make it inadvisable to plant them this year.

Before the present European war these seeds were quoted at about seed was selling at from $4 to $5 per bushel. Up to Aug. 15 there was no change in this seed in the United States, owing to the fact that the principal crop, from Europe was smaller than usual. The crop of hairy vetch seed was also short, and was selling at $5 per bushel. Since that date imports from here seeds have been very limited and new imported seed considerably higher than these prices. The situation in this country a year ago at this time was also unusual, according to the department's information, was all import and exportation, since the market for seed that sold for $4 to $5.20 per bushel in the spring of the season. The present high prices therefore is regarded by the department as a consequence from the standpoint of the supply and demand, and that the prices of the seeds decline are continuing to sell at the present high prices. Many farmers are under in the uptrue to add bonuses to the seller.

When crimson clover is being used for a winter cover crop it is the best practice, or where local experience has shown that it does not winter kill to a good cut, are practically certain to be killed at a distance of ten miles, it will no doubt be profitable.

A somewhat similar condition exists with reference to hairy vetch seed of which the supply is comparatively insecurable as much seed imported above the quantity that will be required. This shortage, however, is partly counterbalanced by the fact that the general production of hairy vetch seed. Winter rye, which is also a winter cover crop is found to be exorbitant the same cause. In farm practice, and the price of seed that succeed in the case of crimson clover.

and then set into a basket or box as desired. The device costs about $2.50 and will pay for itself in a few days' use. Others can be made by the handy farmer at a small cost.

ALFALFA'S MANY USES.

A Valuable Feed For All Classes of Animals.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The widespread opinion that alfalfa is one of the most valuable materials of feeds for all classes of farm animals has been confirmed by elaborate analyses made by the United States department of agriculture and various experiment stations. The general conclusion from these analyses is that alfalfa is comparable with the conservative value of different kinds of feeds based upon their relative content of digestible and nutritive constituents and on their actual carbohydrates and fats.

The comparative three values in dollars and cents the investigators were at pains to work out, based upon the agricultural prices per pound for each of the nutritive constituents, since the market for various kinds of feeds fluctuates.

According to these values different feeds based on amount of digestible nutrients

Alfalfa hay	$ 9.00
Fresh clover	8.00
Clover hay	8.00
Timothy hay	7.00
Fresh timothy	7.00
Wheat bran	22.00
Corn meal	22.00
Corn	20.00

From this table it will be noted, for example, that alfalfa hay is more than twice as valuable as timothy hay, pound for pound and only a little less than that of wheat bran. This was worked out in another way by experiments in the comparative nutritive values of alfalfa and timothy hay. In this experiment, where alfalfa was used in place of grain in feeding dairy cows the same experiments showed that one had one-third pounds of alfalfa took the place of one pound of wheat bran. With alfalfa hay at $20 a ton and wheat bran at $28 a ton the use of alfalfa resulted in a saving of $2.80 for every 100 pounds of butter and 20 cents for every 100 pounds of milk. The profits from the bord in Nebraska 241 pounds of hay were produced from a full ration of corn and alfalfa as against only 200 pounds of hay from a ration of timothy and clover. Hogs, on the other hand, do not relish alfalfa in the stand thus to be injured by it.

As stabling it has been found not to satisfactory in other respects. It is not to be denied that the impression of less from stabling is frequently supported by facts. Many instances can be cited which the hay may be cured and still have the stalks and leaves so dry that alfalfa ordinarily unnecessary. On the other hand, within recent years there have been cases of considerable possibility. This need is greatest on those sections of the country where alfalfa is such an instance, bran and corn cost. It can be fed to horses, cattle, sheep, hogs, but the cost of transportation limits the profitable feeding of alfalfa to the immediate vicinity of the farm where it is grown.

Another of his famous works is the air from St. 96 per bushel. Since that date imports from here seeds have been very limited and new imported seed considerably higher than these prices. ANOTHER HUNTER SHOT

Four Shot Enter Body of Man Guessing Near Bermudian.

Jesse Zeigler, of Spring Grove, was injured in a gunning accident near Bermudian, this county, Thursday morning. He was hit by four shot from the gun of Ira Thomas, also of Spring Grove, who was shooting at rabbits in the woods. The shot entered Zeigler's jaw and he bled from the mouth. Three other shot entered his right hand, two on the back of the hand and one on the left side of the hand above the wrist. Zeigler was not badly injured but a physician was called to dress the wounds.

Zeigler, Emig and W. A. Stambaugh were guessing on the farm of Emig when Thomas thought that there were close together when a woodchuck, scared by the shooting, ran into a field, about 50 yards away, appeared. Emig did not see Zeigler, who was hidden by an underbrush, when he fired. Zeigler stepped from the brush and fell to the ground from the mouth. He was taken to the office of Dr. T. C. Miller, East Berlin, and then to his home, where Dr. L. A. Roth attended him.

WANT EDDIE PLANK

Trio of Clubs Seek Two Mack Pitchers.

If the Athletics are going to discard Eddie Plank, Connie Mack and Jack Coombs by the waiver route there is going to be one big scramble for the services of certain baseball league clubs to land at least two of the three veterans. According to reports, the Yankees, Naps and Red Sox are eager and willing to take two of the quarterly hurlers off his hands at the waiver price or else buy their contracts.

Bill Carrigan, the Red Sox manager has informed Boss Lannen of the Boston Americans to get Plank at any price he he figures that Eddie is still able to fool the American League batters for a year or so yet, and he would be a valuable acquisition to the Sox hurling brigade. Boston has a mighty staff of pitchers and with Plank would have the best baseman in the League.

SAVE PEN MAR FROM BIG FIRE

Mountain Blazes on All Sides. Crest's Big Dining Room Threatened but Saved by Hard Work. Cottagers Rush to the Rescue.

Mountain fires are still burning throughout the Blue Ridge section. About Pen Mar the greatest amount of damage is being done, and where it was thought the fire had been extinguished, a strong wind scattered the live blaze and it has started out at a number of new places. The Crest dining room and Pen Mar Park was saved only through the hardest fighting and several other buildings about the Pen Mar resorts are in danger of taking fire. Fire burned near the Grand View Hotel.

Sparks have been blown a half mile or more at one spot. The hotel chief work of the fire-fighters now is to keep the blaze away from the buildings, rather than to put the fire out, leaving the territory in between untouched, all we put out that they will lose a great number of subscriptions by so doing.

All during the contest the workers have been picking out the places that looked like they would be the most advantageous these places have been gone over a number of times and every possible subscription has been secured. Those who have not been touched at all and the only way to find these is to make a canvass of every house, without such day and make up your mind that you are going over a certain territory and that when you have finished there will not be a place that you were not to see. Just that there will not be a possible subscription for you to have overlooked.

And if your friends are ever going to help, now is the time. Soon the contest will be over and your chance of winning a prize on your own efforts will be gone. Get busy, everybody and that also means that the boys and girls must help. Call at the office and get them a receipt book so that they can start right to the subscribers and turn them over to you. Get them started at once as you will need their help this week. Go on gather and every bit of help that you can get if you are going to be a prize winner.

FOREST FIRE AT BOILING SPRINGS

Valuable Land is Burned over and Scores of Men Go out to Fight the Flames which are not Reported under Control.

Stretching over a path almost a mile in width and extending rapidly before a high wind, a mountain fire which broke out near Beavertown early Saturday morning, is headed toward Boiling Springs and is now on the land of the Forest Mountain Land Company. A number of men drawn from Boiling Springs and the surrounding country are fighting the fire under the direction of State Forest Ranger Conklin.

The blaze is one of the two fires which broke out near Dillsburg, on Saturday from unknown causes. The other which was a smaller fire burned toward the town and for a time threatened the house and buildings on the Trosper farm near that town. It was finally stopped, after strenuous efforts.

Starting at Beavertown in the vicinity of Big Dog Wood the fire spread westward Saturday, Monday and to-day. Land in the vicinity of Indian Rock was burned to fire so far as originally started near the crest of the mountain and is working both ways. Constable Wise, of Dillsburg, called out some men for work on that side. There was a slight mixup, it being claimed that under a recent act of the legislature this work is in the charge of the county supervisors. The base headed inward from near the new Reading Ore Banks near Boiling Springs and property owned by the South Mountain Land Company.

Various estimates have been made as to the area burned over which place it as a big figure. The loss will be heavy. Part of this section was burned over a few years ago. It is believed that unless there is a shift of wind that considerably more damage will be caused.

WILL ORGANIZE RED CROSS HERE

Branch of National Society will be Established in Gettysburg Next Week to Send Bandages and Supplies to Europe.

For the purposes of sending bandages and other needful supplies to the European war zone, a Gettysburg branch of the American Red Cross Society will be organized here next week. The time and place for holding the first meeting will be announced later.

All over the country, these branches are being organized. The national headquarters is supplying samples of the kinds of material needed and full instructions, so that the women throughout the country will be working with a definite system which will yield the best results. Bandages in enormous quantities are needed and all materials sent to New York for shipment are thoroughly sterilized so that they may be ready for immediate use as soon as they are received on the other side.

It is believed that the American Red Cross will also engage extensively in sending clothing and supplies to the Belgian refugees, when the weather is at the front. Whether or not Gettysburg branch of the society will take up this phase of the work will be determined upon at the meeting next week.

Full instructions from national headquarters will be received at the next week's meeting which will be open to the public. Those who desire are to assist. Mrs. E. H. True is in communication with the national Red Cross relative to the work of the local branch.

WEEK IS LIMIT IN ARMIES OF WARRING EUROPE

Average Duration on March and Battlefield Is Only Seven Days.

Incidents From Varied Sources Throw Side Lights on Scenes of Strife.

A LIFE, whether it be that of a man or woman, is less than a week on the fighting line in the European war, according to the estimates made by military experts in the general staffs of the nations now at war. Washington is discussing and writing of the war, but not in the direction on the continent. This fierce, bloody struggle, in which the most effective engaged in the conflict, is a striking example of the old saw that in which living creatures are being hurried by the hour into the arena of the greatest war in history.

In accordance have the average of how long a man or a horse may live in the face of fighting and death, the unending murder fire been compiled that: The life of a soldier in the trenches.

Life of a man—French, six days; Belgian, seven days; British, seven days; German, five days; Belgian, six days; Servian, eight days.

Life of a horse—French, five days; Belgian, four days; British, four days; German, three days; Belgian, four days; Servian, five days.

War Many, but Invisible.

A French officer who had been in the trenches for three days, when he was carried that this is probably the noisiest war in the history of the world. It is also the most nearly invisible war. Except for the flash of artillery fire, and the flashes from Belgium and France, there is no evidence to the casual observer that the greatest battle in the history of the world is being fought. At the front, the trenches are so close that the French soldiers can hear the German officers giving orders. The French officers have been instructed to allow the Germans the men to keep their heads down.

The same officer told of a skirmish he saw with being Germany's deadliest foe, the Belgian army. Belgium, he declared, is the only country in the world of fighting, standing Servian army. Belgium, he declared, is the only country in the world of fighting, standing Servian army. Belgium, he declared, is the only country in the world of fighting, standing Serv

TURKEY STRONG ON BLACK SEA

Her Fleet on Inland Ocean Outweighs Russia's.

HAS ARMY OF MILLION.

Ottoman Entry Into War May Bring About New Alignment of Powers. With Probabilities in Favor of Allies. Turks Have Long Been Favorable to the German Side.

The initial advantage on the Black sea apparently lies with Turkey in the opening of hostilities against Russia, according to observers. In addition to the battle cruiser Goeben, which has attained a speed of 27.3 knots and is one of the most formidable craft afloat, and the protected cruiser Breslau of 3 Skl knot record, Turkey has in the Black sea two battleships of Dreadnought class, four pre-Dreadnoughts, two small cruisers and numerous destroyers and gunboats, many of them built in Germany. This fleet is divided three battleships:

Barbaros Hairdin, 20,000 tons, 30 knots.

Torgut Oreiss, 27,000 tons, 22 knots—sister ships.

Kilyge-el-ile Barbarossa and Turgut Reis, 9,000 tons each, 17 knots. Formerly German battleships, and two others of the same type.

Two cruisers, the Hamidieh and the Medjidieh, 3,000 tons, 23 knots.

Russia's Black Sea Fleet.

Russia's Black sea fleet consists of six pre-Dreadnought battleships, the protected cruiser, now armored, Kahul and a number of old torpedo boats and gunboats.

Three Dreadnoughts are under construction, but may not be in commission for months.

If Portugal be counted, Turkey is the eleventh nation to be involved in the great European struggle. Her participation has been expected for weeks, and diplomats say that they foresee Roumania and Bulgaria are likely to be added, and possibly Italy.

Notwithstanding the warnings of the allies, it has been devoted heretofore that Turkey would yield to German influences and join against Russia. Since the opening of the war 600 Germans of fierce have arrived in Turkey, as well as a large quantity of munitions of war, including one of the big siege guns. German guns were mounted in the Dardanelles forts and a German officer, Weiser Pasha, placed in command. It is a combination of the Ingomar and the Asia. Minor court have been carried out and millions more have been sent in check vessels.

Liberal Will Favor Allies.

If the control of Turkey into the constitutional Italy and the other Balkan states, as expected, it will bring 3,371,041 additional men into battle. As will be seen more navies. In the event the line up will probably be in favor of the allies.

Turkey, with an army on war footing figured at approximately 1,000,000, and a navy of thirty-five warships manned by 32,000 men, will thus contribute 1,031,000 men to the German cause.

The allies will profit in the service of 210 warships and a total of 2,340,000 men contributed as follows: Italy—Army, 1,200,000; navy, 160 ships manned by 50,000. Greece—Army, 200,000; navy, forty-one ships, manned by 30, 000. Bulgaria—Army, 700,000. Roumania, army, 500,000. About this entire force more navies will be added, as she is still bitter against her enemies in the recent second Balkan war, and she may join Turkey.

Dread Naval Quakes and Bruises.

Turkey mobilized her army early in August, supposedly with the moral support of the German government, as it was thought the forces would be employed against Greece for the recovery of territory lost in the Balkans war before hostilities in Europe closed upon her, aside from the United States, said to offer the Turkish purchased ostensibly two ships from Germany, the Goeben and Breslau, which sought refuge from the allied fleet in the Mediterranean. There has since been doubt, however, that there was a bona fide purchase, for it has been asserted that these ships, although flying the crescent, retained their German crews and officers.

Tremendous pressure was brought by German influence to induce Turkey to abandon the plans against Greece and take the field against Russia.

The staggering cost of continuing in readiness for war, and the subject of war and its effects were put on the defensive. The scale of the enemies' powers threatening the consequences if Turkey declared not followed by German victories in Belgium, Belgium and France, finally forced a demobilization.

Russia minimized Turkey's stability of materially nearly two weeks of the services of the Russian cabinet were transferred to Odessa.

War Situation Once Same.

While works are going to be the final term. This implies to such and western Asia. This time it is not Jesse Pelham who sets the style, but the ninth monarchy of war several months ambers announced that as soon as the present supply of dyes is exhausted they will have to make white flour bear. The dye is now from Germany, and the importation has almost ceased.

QUARANTINE ON ADAMS COUNTY

Another Herd is Condemned and Action Taken to Prevent Further Spread of the Disease Inspectors Busy

Adams County is now under quarantine on account of the appearances here of the foot and mouth disease. Action placing this measure on the county was taken at noon Wednesday by agents of the State Livestock Sanitary Board who, during the day, found a third herd of cattle infected with the disease.

The principal effect of the quarantine here will be to prohibit shipments from Adams to other counties not quarantined, unless by special permit and for immediate slaughter. A state-wide quarantine was placed on Tuesday, preventing shipments outside of the state, except under these conditions.

Farmers Watters, one of the Baltimore excursionists of September 14, was notified on the night of Saturday to steal Herman Brem's automobile. Watters jumped into the car near Breezewood on the day of the excursion but was overtaken by William Tipton who was riding above Bedford guard. The costs were placed on the county.

George Craig, of Gettysburg, was acquitted on a charge of assault and the costs were placed on the county in this case, also.

Jacob Lau, of the Commonwealth vs Mary C. Weaver, charged with assisting her husband to commit suicide, was forfeited to be respited at January Session.

The civil suits which are to be tried at November Court were scheduled Wednesday and a board, consisting of that of J. G. Slonaker vs John F. Wolf, for the location of a road on the property of Mr. Slonaker, who claims about $500 damages.

Mr. Slonaker was the first witness called on the stand in the testimony and the cross examination occupied the entire morning. A number of witnesses were examined during the afternoon. Walter claims that the plant did not work properly and it was on the account that the bill was not settled. He placed the value of the plant at $1,000, while C. E. Stable Esq., represents the defendant.

The case is the third of those which took the two-morning examination at Gettysburg in the fully new manner of hearing reached the required averages of 90. The first, Paul E. Bushey, 97.33; Clarence D. Deardorff, 95.50; Maurice Kuhn, 95.33; Harry E. Bushey, 94.66; John Demby, 85.50; Earl A. Dentrick, 85.33; Norman Beates, 85.50; John Z. Rudisill, 83.66; Walter D. Dentler, 83.66; proprietor, against Charles F. Danner for a bill of $141.25 for repairing a threshing engine, in which judgment was given the plaintiff by Squire Jacob S. McSherry upon a hearing at which the defendant was not present. Danner has taken an appeal from the decision of the Justice.

The jury to hear the case will be: John C. Nary, R. H. Black, Zechariah Paul, Peter Yeats, Lewis Hoose, Jr., John M. Warner, D. F. Wenk, W. C. Lawver, Amos Smith, John D. Bliey, Jr., Jacob Hoffman, Jr., Jacob Hoffman, Sr.

Constable John Wolf, of Straban township, has been busy the past week down in Straban township, and that township is now quarantined. Two herds were found to be infected with the disease, one of which was owned by Jacob Hafer, and the other by Jacob H. Nenges, Conewago township.

Residents of Kent Berlin petitioned for the appointment of Constable A. Phillips, to succeed Noah Ball, who has resigned from the borough. Their petition was granted.

A. J. Gulse and John F. Sharretts have purchased the interest of Mr. Sharretts in the firm of Adams Sporting Goods Co., and will conduct the business at the old stand.

Mr. Slonaker was the first witness called on the stand in the testimony and the cross examination occupied the entire morning. A number of witnesses were examined during the afternoon. Walter claims that the plant did not work properly and it was on the account that the bill was not settled. He placed the value of the plant at $1,000, while C. E. Stable Esq., represents the defendant.

RAIN STOPS THE FOREST FIRES

Clouds of Smoke Swept over County on Sunday, Dropping Cinders and Ashes. Several Thousand Acres Burned Over. Many Fugitives.

All day Sunday dense clouds of smoke hung over the north part of the county and in some of the towns cinders and ashes from the fires on South Mountain fell in large quantities. General apprehension was felt regarding the possible further spread of the flames but it was relieved when rain began to fall early in the evening and the fires are now reported to be entirely conquered.

During the past week thousands of acres of valuable timberland have been burned over both the South Mountain and South Mountains. As many as twelve distinct fires were raging furiously at one time or another and some buildings fell prey to the flames. Many others were threatened and the two usual prominent summer resorts in this section—the Mar and Mt. Holly Springs—were both threatened. The fire fighters who participated in battling with the flames are estimated to have reached a total of 1500 men, but frequent winds confounded large efforts to hefile all their efforts.

Shortly before rain fain started to fall Sunday night a veritable hurricane swept over the burning districts but it was followed by a heavy rain by the welcome rainfall and the danger was soon considered effectively.

The most serious fire was in the neighborhood of the Mar Park and it is estimated that the blaze swept over more than 1,000 acres of land in that vicinity. On Friday the fire was put under control by a force of more than 500 fighters who have been on the scene since the conflagration started. On Saturday, near Edgemont a new mountain fire broke out and for quite a while assumed threatening proportions.

The cottages at Pen Mar of John M. Newcomer, hotel belonging to Mrs. I. O. Hoffman, cottage of Charles E. Bosser, of Waynesboro, were saved on Saturday after the fire had burned to the portches.

The forest fire in the vicinity of Harper's Ferry have made it dangerous for motorists and persons who pass along the roads near where the fire caught. The intense heat has loosened some of the huge boulders along the mountain side and many have been rolling on the new piles. One man, coming from Harper's Ferry several days ago heard a rumbling noise and looked around him in the large rock, about the size of an apple turned around on the side of the mountain. He was almost in the direct path of the stone, when he whipped up his horse and escaped being struck.

The huge stone struck the rear part of the wagon and demolished it, but the driver escaped without injury, as did his horse. He is said seriously were posted near the dangerous places, warning the users of this part of the road.

EUROPEAN POLICEMEN.

Clever in London, "Bungy" in Paris and Pests in Berlin.

In manner, fortunately, is in perfect control of his district, the London policeman is the natural successor to perfection, writes Percival Pollard, who in "Vagabond Journeys" has a word to say of the various policemen of the world. Of the Berlin he seeks only self American policemen except those of London.

To the stranger the policeman seems the ordinary man in authority. He is, however, it is to his control of traffic, manners and dress, that he is instructed. When you consider the narrowness of the streets and the enormous traffic it is the very skill with which he solves this problem.

The Paris policeman never looks any thing; and he is right, for the science of controlling traffic at crowded street crossings is entirely that of the observer about with another. No one seems him, but with absolute precision he the speed of the Parisian cabby and the speed of the motor car. The operation of Parisian street traffic is all that is really necessary to impress you with the belief that in case of need the police force could put to wars with much noise and much success, crushing the enemy.

The police of Berlin are vastly but are thus those of the city as they look as well, according to our notions. In the matter of personalities they are fairly smart. The men are polite, but they are brusque. Indeed, it is said that Berlin is one of the cleanest and most orderly cities in Europe, the outing individuals the Berlin police force. They are not to be trifled with. When anything impresses to you more than the fact that you are a stranger, civet or bestir your way you are fair to certain of running into hordes of the police, who are ever ready to answer by the man on the beat.

No description of the Prussian policeman is complete, and here the is not took the same view of the matter as the Parisian.

Two evenings, during an engagement at the Metropolitan Opera House, I had been watching whether to bestow her affections on the man in blue who had assisted the hero. Then, sitting above a row of the orchestra, I saw the hero sweeping thee and there.

Then he turned and, tired of himself in solitude — noble a man! She lulled him. Then he turned and, tired of himself, bribing the one—hero and smile. Then, tired of both, he turned to the policeman would die she vowed that if he did not succeed in getting her to the stage door she would never speak to him again. Then he turned, and tired of all three, he gave his attention to the orchestra.

But You reserved, and the two were left alone. Then the policeman began to have but one pride in her husband, and that was in her voice. Whenever he was asked to express his first commission as a soldier he would say that he had received general in May, 1858, but it was not until he had served for years in the army in command of one of Shafter's left wings in the battle of San Juan and Kettle Hill that he was promoted to the rank of major general of staff to General Brooke, the military governor of Cuba, and for his services there he was made brigadier.

Then, as General Chaffee's adopted son, he went with him to China, and he got the job of commanding the Philippine division. It was during his term of command that the Moro outbreak occurred, and he was in the field when he received the order to go to Manila to take command of the department.

Then he was ordered to Chickamauga, where he spent his first commission as a major general. He was then ordered to Governors Island, where he was

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

Ballin of Princeton a Remarkable Tackle.

In making his selections for the all-American football teams at last year Walter Camp picked Ballin of Princeton as the best tackle of the year. This year Ballin captains the Tiger eleven, and his work so far gives promise that he will again star when he meets Harvard and Yale. Last year Ballin proved his ability to size up situations quickly and, in addition to his excellent line work, proved fast in getting down the field and overtake some of the swiftest runners of the game. He combines power with speed, seems intuitively to know when the play will strike and is almost sure to get the runner unless the very best interference covers the holder of the pigskin.

Oaklon Came Back.

The most remarkable comeback that is recent baseball season has brought to fame is Jack Clarkson, outfielder of the Brooklyn team. Jack was released back into the minors some time the season now after suffering a cold sore, and his ability to "come back" is the first time he did it. Clarkson had failed to get on the baseball map for a few years in spring, but after Wilbert Robinson had secured his release he showed that he could be developed that Robinson would be very well by, but better with the stick than any other member of the team. Jack also been of the best outfielders in the league, and with Robinson team and played ball of the Indian league of season that it did not would have been the team to play the All-Stars for the world's championship instead of the Boston Braves.

A Sa elf Term.

"Preferred lis- something new in golf annals, indeed," thought it might be imagine that four equivalent itself something to do with the rules game over at the discovered hole, but those the word "preferred" is in itself a blunder. Preferred lies, however, has nothing to do with matters of verbosity. A new course was recently opened at Brunswick, Me., and as yet it has not received a high degree of perfection. Through the green, where the average lies shot would be, there is long grass and rough, so that stances have been driven into the ground, marking a square of supposed fairway. A ball landing within this restricted territory may be played by the player for the second shot, and from this fairway comes the expression "preferred lie" has come into use.—New York Sun.

Squirrel Hunting Will Celebrate.

When the National league men hold their annual meeting at the Waldorf Astoria, in New York, in December the victory of the Braves will be celebrated, it is said, in a unique way.

The Boston players will be dined and President John T. Tener will extend hospitality in every immortal sense of promise to the visiting baseball men. Then will revive the formal reception for all the other baseball owners, who realize that the capture of the world's championship was a most needed revenge for the jarred circuit.

Harvard's New Captain.

Walter Henry Trumbull, Jr., of St. Louis, Mo., has been appointed acting captain of the Harvard varsity eleven during the absence of Captain Nick Kelley. Trumbull has played center and guard and is a member of the A. D. club.

Captain Kelley, who was operated on for appendicitis continues to improve, but it is unlikely that he will be able to play again this season.

World Series Receipts.

Each Boston player received $2,176 for participating in the world's series while each of the Philadelphia players received $2,042.71. Twenty-six Boston players received a total of $73,116, and twenty-four Philadelphia players divided $40,761.15

HUMOR, PATHOS IN NEW STORIES FROM EUROPE'S BATTLEFIELDS

Soldiers Become Fatalists. "Angels Have No Nation," Says Wounded

English Indian Troops Think That Bursting Shells Are Part of Fireworks

CORRESPONDENTS at the front or connected in obscure places with the war, from European fields, make it message daily to get off to editors of newspapers or their side fights of the war. Here are some of the best that have come over the cables or by mail:

Vivid is the description of life on the battlefield as given in a letter from a French soldier to his wife. He says: "Slumped something in deadly grim over infantry crisis on an artillery line wall, card games in the trenches, horrible cook details who every day come from their shelters back to the kitchen, was under fire all the time—these are incidents related by the "pion-pion," the artillery.

"Bombs are trumps—the king of hearts is out.

"Do not think that I am writing this with a pencil. I have not the time. I am a quiet game of cards is going on in my trench-shelter, and my comrades, their heads pressed down, are playing a few rounds of manille in another French trench and the Germans bombers while waiting.

"That's the way we have been living for six days.

The first two machines disabled by the enemy's fire were brought back to Dunkirk. On each of these occasions Warneford was ordered out.

MOTHER BLACKSMITHS FIGURED SOMEWHAT BATTLEFIELDS.

Thought Shells Were Fireworks.

The London Morning Post prints an extract from a letter of a cavalry officer in India, which tells of the Indian troops behaved to their first experience of shell fire. Describing the artillery officer, the writer was serving in the Dehra Dun brigade, at Ypres, dated Oct. 26 and written from Belgium, he says:

"When the firing began we were told that the regiment was going to be relieved by the Gurkhas. I was glad until I heard that my troops were to stay and that we were to go to the rear. It is the first time I have been under fire, and I confess I didn't think so at the moment. It was the most weird sight I've ever seen.

"There were six forces and a wind blowing, and the shells were bursting all when those fellows, with their turbans on their heads, standing up as steady as rocks, up out of the darkness. The underwood was crackling, of course, and there were friends with them at once.

"Well, the Germans had hardly got into the trenches on either side of me when the fun began in earnest. I was the worst half hour I've ever spent. As, of course, I couldn't make them understand and as they had never seen shells in their lives, I didn't know what they would do. They behaved splendidly, and I think they thought the shells were fireworks at first, for they laughed and cheered. The only thing that he was most afraid of as shower-like shell it does not at all

"I had eight n night heard the order of quiet. 'Now the I artillery could do nothing for fifty yards shortly after dawn I found an explosion of a shell in the trench next to mine, between the posts. A sawyer light head- ed, but in every other way sound, was killed on the spot, and three others wounded. Eight in the center this time—no one hurt, by a miracle. Fifty yards on either side gone, and my line thus cut up. It was awful. Whose turn will be next? Another man down! Will there more on now? No, the battery is still there. At last it decides to turn to the left a safer spot, and we fall in and march off to shouts of triumph from the men, soon lingering to help the wounded.

"I was glad to get away, but even relieved. You cannot imagine how many trenches we have dug during the two days on this firing line. Trenches of all sorts, from the deep trench to deep ditches that cover us entirely. Talk about the German trenches—ours are as good, I think. And we have furnished them with every convenience possible.

"Over our heads a furious artillery duel is raging. Often these other—the fortdens related by the "pion-pion," the artillery.

"Bombs are trumps—the king of hearts is out.

"Do not think that I am writing this with a pencil. I have not the time. I am a quiet game of cards is going on in my trench-shelter, and my comrades, their heads pressed down, are playing a few rounds of manille in another French trench and the German bombers while waiting.

FARMER LOSES MANY CATTLE

Two Thousand Dollars Worth of Livestock Condemned on Fuss Farm Near Emmitsburg. Cattle Had Hoof and Mouth Disease.

Cases of the foot-and-mouth disease, which has spread among live stock in many parts of the country, have been discovered in the vicinity of Emmitsburg. State Veterinarian Dr. C. Hickman and other inspectors visited the farm of Fuss & Son, near Emmitsburg, on Monday and, finding that about 10 head of cattle were suffering with the disease, ordered all the live stock on the place killed and the premises burned.

Appraisers from the neighborhood met at once and assessed the stock to be killed include 39 head of cattle, 22 shoats and 10 hogs. The valuation placed on the stock was $1,950. The Federal and State governments will pay half of this sum.

In the afternoon Mr. Fuss made ready to have the fire dictims dug in heavy the carcasses, and it is expected that the animals will be slaughtered this forenoon.

The live stock inspectors are making a close investigation of the conditions in that vicinity. It is hoped that the infection has not carried to any other farms in that neighborhood.

It was stated at the Fuss home that the cattle which had the disease had been bought about three weeks ago from Mr. Futaman, of that vicinity, who, it is understood, secured the stock from Lancaster, or thereabouts. Mr. Fuss bought lots of cattle, putting them on his place to fatten, and this cattle is the cause of doing. He does not run a dairy farm. For the past three weeks there have been about 39 cattle on the place.

He had bought two lots of stock, the first being purchased about two weeks ago, but among those none has been troubled with the disease. Action in the last lot are the ones that have been affected, along who the cattle have been affected. Monday morning it was stated that the cattle showed signs of improvement. They have been given medicine, but because of the danger of the spread of the afflict plan is to have the cattle killed and their carcasses buried.

The cattle belonging to Mr. Fuss limped and were sore about the mouth. It is said they broke out

KILLED KING OF THE MOUNTAINS

Deer which Has Baffled Hunters for Many Years is at Last Brought to Earth. Bore Mark of Farmer Chase. Other Deer Killed.

Christian Callmer, Glen Furney, is the hero among the deer hunters on the mountains. He has brought down the large deer which has foiled all hunters for a number of years.

"Long Jake" the people of the Glen Furney vicinity long ago named this deer. He was big, he was dark in color—because of his years. It was said—he was wily and it was believed his thick coat of hair had the power to turn aside bullets. Before and after hunting season he was to be seen frequently in the old forge and Glen Furney sections and he seemed literally a monarch among the deer.

Many hunters had espied him and chased him but none could bring him low until Christian Callmer came across him, Wednesday afternoon about 3:30 o'clock, near the old forge and not far from the Sprott deer club's outing grounds.

Callmer shot twice at "Long John". The first bullet broke a front and a hind leg and the second penetrated the animal's heart.

The deer weighed almost 200 pounds. An examination showed a scar, made by a bullet, some years ago.

A number of men spent an entire season a few years ago in the pursuits of "Long John" and were so sure they would get him that they promised friends a part of his meat. The deer, however, although showing himself frequently to the hunters and being shot at a number of times, managed to escape the slaughter.

Dr. Friday Calvin Lower, of the Chalktown Club, shot a three prong buck.

SLAYS DEER IN FATHER'S GARDEN

Farm of Isaiah Rice Has Sensation when Deer Bounds into Garden while Men are Engaged in Butchering. Other Deer Killed.

When a four pound, 125 pound buck invaded the garden of his father in Menallen township on Monday Mervin Rice, of Dunbarville, ran home to the house, got a gun and while one head brought down the antlered creature. To reach the block place the deer had to travel for about two miles through the mountains, a part of the time rounding across open fields.

The shooting occurred during a butchering which Isaiah Rice was having at his farm two miles west of Dunbarville. Mervin Rice, of that town, had gone out to the homestead to help with the work and they had just finished the slaughter of five hogs when one of the men, looking up, saw the buck coming full tilt toward the garden.

"Look deer!" he shouted and all hands stopped work and prepared to try to get the nimble footed creature, which was not stopped by them but ran straight ahead and into the garden.

Mervin Rice hurried into the house and got the gun. By the time he got out, the deer had freed itself and started again, this time into another part of the farm. Just as it reached the wire the gun blazed and the deer fell.

There was no indication that it had been chased and that the mountain hunters and how it happened to get that far away from South Mountain and to go in a direct line, partly through fields and partly through woodland, with no one seen in a mystery.

There was a harried end to the butchering operations until the men could recover from the excitement of the deer hunt; when, suddenly, a three thrust upon them. There was more excitement and the fun at animal was being up alongside of the porkers which had been killed earlier in the day.

INDICT THEMSELVES

Failed to Take Licenses as Merchants and Gamely Pace It.

The Grand Jury at Hagerstown created a sensation Saturday evening when it delivered up by handing in 19 indictments against merchants in Washington county for doing business without license. Some of the men indicted were leading business men, and have been in business for years.

Two of the jurors themselves were indicted, the grand jury voting for indictment. Others indicted were relatives of jurors.

One of the merchants indicted is said to have been doing business seven years without a license, and as other four years.

As the warrants have not been served, the authorities decline to reveal the names of those indicted.

Judge Keedy, who twice last week charged the jury as to its duty in the license matter, said he would deal with the merits of each case separately. Where it is proved the offense was purely a matter of forgetfulness he will deal lightly, but where it is proved the law was deliberately violated the penalty will be severe.

DIPHTHERIA EPIDEMIC

Chambersburg Physicians Examining All the School Pupils.

The diphtheria situation at Chambersburg is now aggressively handled by the school directors, Health Board and local physicians acting in concert. A child is child examination is being made for symptoms of throat or nose trouble.

The physicians were a little balky for a while, school authorities forced the modest fee of a nickel a head, which was brought to modest. Then the physicians argued that such an examination was too superficial and would not get to the root of the trouble. They contended that much better results would be obtained by securing a culture of suspects and those suffering with a cold and get the exact results by inoculation. This, however, was not agreed to by the school board, and the other plan was then sequenced in and the work started.

The physicians strongly urge that the schools be closed and kept closed for ten days, the germinating period of the disease. This will probably be done after the examination is completed.

There are about twenty cases in the town and the disease is regarded as being epidemic.

ROBBED OF SEVEN MONTHS' SAVINGS

After Working for Better Portion of a Year in New York Orchards, Ernest Chapman is Relieved of All his Savings.

Robbed of $150, all of his savings from seven months of hard work in the apple orchards of New York State, Ernest Chapman, of near Greencastle, had to give up his return home on the eve of his expected departure for Pennsylvania. He was a child his fortune was received Saturday at The Times office in a telegram from Buffalo.

Shortly after Chapman reached Rochester to take his train for home he became acquainted with William Hogan. Chapman then had $150 in cash but, after spending some time with Hogan in several Rochester restaurants, the Greencastle resident found that he was penniless.

Chapman declares that he spent only $14 and consequently the remainder was stolen and as Hogan was the only man who knew how much Chapman had in his possession, he kept, he was arrested shortly afterward charged with theft. Hogan will be arraigned some time today in Buffalo before Chief Detective Owen Carroll.

Chapman went to Rochester until he could get work.

When called by telephone Saturday morning at his home where he is visiting Mrs. Orrville William P. Chapman, father of the unfortunate young man, said:

"We knew nothing of this until you telephoned. Ernest left here in April to work in some of the orchards of that state. Recently he had been working in the orchards of Rochester. He is a careful turn, had saved a large sum of money and was planning to come home. He is a boy of good habits and not addicted to drinking. He had $150 on the result of his careful saving during the past six or seven months.

"On Thursday he and our son, Curtis Chapman, of this county, were expected to leave for home together and the two boys had made arrangements to ride in an automobile. Curtis was there on time but Ernest did not turn up before leaving. He was supposed to leave, as that Curtis came on without him, arriving here about Saturday evening. He knows nothing at all about his brother having been robbed."

A limited number of these maps have been prepared. They will prove especially valuable to automobilists and to those whose business will take them through the sections shown on the map.

NEED NOT PAY

Local Building Associations are Exempt from War Tax.

The Gettysburg Building and Loan Association which is one of the oldest in the State, the Gettysburg Building and Loan Association which is also one of the oldest in the State, receiving money only to members will not be subject to the federal war tax in the opinion of State Banking Commissioner H. Smith. Mr. Smith said when asked for an opinion that he considered that building and loan associations would be subject that he did not think that they would be required to pay the tax the Pennsylvania plan, which contemplates withdrawals only at maturity paying regular dues. In the Spanish war building associations were exempted from the war tax.

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

Tommy McCarty, the Newest White Hope.

Tommy McCarty, live of Montana, but now supporting in New York city, is the latest addition to the white hope confidence. Tommy has not yet had an opportunity to show his wares to the east, but he is hooked for a fight in Madison Square Garden on July 4 with Levy of Australia. Levy is said to be a clever boxer and a hard hitter. He was put forth Ted Miller at Butte, and not only performed well but impressed the opinion that he had earned the decision.

Tommy is twenty-two years old, six feet high and weighs 190 pounds. He is fetus built, rugged and always keeps in good condition. He used to be a fighter of the Terry McGovern type, is quick as the feet and hands and can hit either hand. Tommy is said to be a good boxer, and under the tutelage of Henry Lindquist, his manager, is developing into a clever fighter. Like Luther McCarthy, who was killed in a fight with Sullivan, he has been before entering pugilism was a cowboy in Montana.

Silver Fox Golf Success

In the American Magazine Jerry Travers, four times amateur golf champion of the United States, tells how Harry Vardon as the greatest golf player he ever saw. He declares that he play fully and tells many stories of his experiences with Vardon. He says that Vardon averaged 72 for 100 tough rounds of golf and that is the greatest record of Great Britain. The link of Vardon's record is broken by that of Jerry Travers, to three few simple rules:

First—Keeping the head down.

Second—Refusing to worry over any bad shot he may make.

Third—Playing coolly within him and not overdoing anything.

Fourth—Playing always for the hole. Not for the green or the bunker.

Fifth—Studying his game and perfecting it by expert coaching.

Sixth—Making a point, even in practice play, of never missing a short one, keeping one's head still, looking at the ball, etc.

Seventh.—Keeping the body under control and never thinking of anything else.

Eighth—Using no easy, natural method saving that stops as long as possible in line with the intended flight of the ball.

Cuba as a Fight Center.

Cuba will be one of the great fight centers of 1915, according to Jerry Driscoll, manager of Jack Johnson. And if the plans of the Cuban republic are successful the greatest prize fight matches will be staged. One new bout is already signed for Havana, when Jack Moffatt and Freddie Welsh, another between Jack Johnson and Jess Willard. Promoters received a substantial offer for his fighter's services and he will be "the biggest fish in the world over the lovely tropic island in Havana."

According to Outlook, a committee has been organized to form a permanent and extensive entertainment for the large number of tourists who are expected to visit the Exposition.

Yale Loses Walter Camp.

The retirement of Walter Camp as graduate coach at Yale is one more in a most important step in the history of Yale athletics. Since this man was individual he was the founder as it were of football. His influence and ideals have been his only. However, I understand that the graduate coaches will have less expanded baseball and outfield coaches. Camp will be missed and a remarkable account of all of the Yale athletic teams will be lost to the following year dues. In the Spanish during the two great centers of their development.

The Forward Pass.

All the big teams in the east seem to be using the forward pass now. They use it in a regular play. They continue using it as a last resort to gain ground or more as a part of regular tactics. All of this adds interest to football and I feel sure that the early American mood was a gentle and favoring matter, usually savage-ella.

A battery of artillery rattles through the streets and he pauses to give a wonder at these harmless looking steel tubes that will soon be belching forth real destruction at the enemy.

During the day his thoughts dwell with the rifles, picturing them in a superficious manner as they will be one from the army recruits of the newspaper stands and in Hogan was the only man who knew how much Chapman had in his possession, he kept, he was arrested shortly afterward charged with theft. Famillar Sports Overcrowded.

A passage from Northumberland's evasion, which leads to the Thames Embankment, is overcrowded with boats.

"That street seems familiar, but I can't quite place it," said a visitor to it."

"Oh, that's the Thames embankment," I heard another voice say.

Familiarity breeds contempt, and the first voice in a tone of surprise, "What! Have I been here before?"

"Quiet" cause the abrupt reply.

Familiarity breeds contempt. The many lights that once adorned the embankment and cast their myriad reflections into the dark waters of the Thames were no more. This absence of light even made the sadly neglected river look as it arrived beneath the bridges more quiet and lonesome.

The light in the face of "Big Ben" has been extinguished, and one can no longer pass up at him to tell what time it is. Not only is his face shrouded, but he is "dumb," for "Big Ben" no longer strikes the hours

GIVE CASH TO WAR COMMITTEE

Gettysburg People Quick to Respond and, while Some Give Materials, Others Donate Cash, for Red Cross Relief Work.

Quick response has followed the announcement of relief efforts to rend supplies to the war zone and this morning two cash contributions, one of $5,000 and one of $2,500, were received from citizens for the purchase of material suitable for bandages. A number of other cash gifts are in prospect and it is believed that the contributions from this town will be substantial.

While much cash has been given, the donations of old material to be made into bandages have also started and a large quantity is already in sight, which will be sorted up into the proper sizes and shapes.

A large sewing party to prepare bandages and other materials for shipment to Europe is announced for next Wednesday afternoon in the Law Library of the Court House. Plans for this meeting were made at the conference of short forty town women on Friday in response to a call issued. The meeting "bee" was arranged for Wednesday not for Tuesday but was postponed one day because of the Girls' and Boys' Leagues exhibit.

QUARANTINE INDEFINITE

Restrictions Laid on Account of Disease May Be Relied in a Week or May Remain in Effect Several Months. Developments.

The quarantines placed on Adams County farms on account of the appearance of the foot and mouth disease are for an indefinite period. They may be lifted within a week of being being placed or they may remain in effect for months, depending on the prevalence of the disease.

That the number of cattle and other livestock it will be necessary to kill in Adams and York counties in order to stamp out the foot and mouth disease is the problem that has not before August 1, but may be shipped in interstate commerce without disinfection by that time after November 1. The railroads will not accept this hay, however, without a certificate of disinfection from a veterinarian.

Farmers, or others, that have fat stock for sale will not be allowed to dispose of them to the butchers, or to other persons, for slaughtering, but they can obtain a certificate of health or a permit from any qualified veterinarian to ship them to market.

All cattle may be moved after inspection if they are not diseased. There are no special inspectors in the county, all veterinarians are required to quarantine, and report all suspicious cases of foot and mouth disease to the nearest State Police Station, to the State Livestock Sanitary Board of Pennsylvania.

No Increases that ever sailed the Spanish main gained a mess of fame and fortune more than the Emden of Captain von Muller and his 321 men of the German East Asiatic squadron. Cruiser Squadron Proximity sauce in the Pacific ocean, and the Emden, lone and isolated to get her supplies and ammunition from the sea, ran up, like kept going for weeks beyond the limit of human endurance, and she would not.

Then, with artful pretext to the rear of the Emden is possibly that of the Japanese cruiser Idzumo, from which proyed upon Calcos commerce with ruthless efficiency. The Idzumo was foln when the size of the fleet that the Emden was destroyed. Then, with the fact that the Admiralty sent two of the most powerful cruisers of the British navy in search, without success.

On the days when the Emden was not actually doing damage to the enemy she was coaling or making repairs, giving some bigger fighting vessel the slip. Her luck was phenomenal. She had not a single scratch from a shell, and her casualties were confined to a few men who were killed and wounded in the attack on the wireless station at Yap. Her commander, Captain von Muller, left a record of humanity and courtesy to his enemies that will live as long as the history of the war.

May Never Know Victims.

Many of the victims of the Emden remain about twenty-one ounces, but the Emden's raids have involved much more damage than that because all the merchantmen she sank could not be seen invisible. How she got coal was a mystery. Some of it was found in the pockets of the British steamer Exford, captured by the Emden in the Indian ocean, but the Emden's bunkers could not be said before he went the prize to the Exford. Then the Emden ran across the tender for the Zeppelin base at Tsing-tau, and got from her 200 tons of coal she needed.

Then the Emden ran across the British Prince Pioneer Joseph of 1,000 tons, and got from her 1,000 tons more. Many of the Indian ocean sailing vessels that the Emden destroyed had cargoes of coal on board.

Finally the Emden ran across the Russian volunteer fleet steamer Riazan, and got from her 1,000 tons of coal she needed.

GETS IRON CROSS

August Bernstein in His Boots for Bravery.

Word has been received in Carlisle by Mrs. Samuel Kronenberg that August Bernstein, one of the four nephews of Mrs. Kronenberg who are in the German Army, has been decorated for bravery under the Iron Cross. Bernstein, who is lying wounded in a large German hospital at Dusseldorf, is improving rapidly and expects to get back at the fighting soon.

He writes interestingly of his experiences, and expressed profound sorrow at the death of daughter, though not among the battlefields. The wounded man said that it would be physically impossible for him and things to work harder than the German soldiers are doing. He said that he himself at one time had not had his boots off for nine weeks.

Auditors' Report

The auditing committee for the 1913 institute shows receipts of $1,000.00 and expenditures of $963.00, leaving a balance of $49.15. There was, however, a total deficit in the 1911 and 1912 of $130.35, leaving a deficit of $97.20 remaining last year. The statement was: Mr. Hafer has audited by I. L. Taylor, appointed by the Institute Committee, and by Prof. D. Reynolds and Miss Lydia E. Hartman, appointed by the Institute.

The Principals Association of the teachers of Adams County met during the work of the year by electing Prof. Irvin Rosenstock of Littlestown, president; Prof. D. W. Lehman, of Arendtsville, vice president; Miss Helen Cope, Gettysburg, secretary; W. A. Burgoon, Gettysburg, treasurer; Walter Gilbert, Gettysburg, member of the executive committee.

Superintendent Hafer announced that on January 16 when the following subjects will be discussed, "Should Prizes be Awarded in the Public Schools", D. W. Lehman, Arendtsville; Roy D. Koontz, Littlestown; "Writing", Miss Mary Bonner, Gettysburg; E. Cecil Stover, Arendtsville; "Spelling", C. Raymond Minnich, Gettysburg; J. W. Bucher, East Berlin; "The Need of Special Training of the High School Pupil in English", Miss Bess Gregg, East Berlin; Marvin Winebrenner, Littlestown.

The Primary Teachers' Association elected Hiram Lady, of Arendtsville, president; Mrs. K. K. Wilbrecht, Gettysburg, vice president; Miss Pearle Bare, Biglerville secretary-treasurer. The annual meeting will probably be held at the time of the teachers' rally following the annual school directors' convention in February, and one of the lectures at that convention will likely be present. Topics to be discussed by the teachers are:

"It has been said that you must have a person down in a hole to rescue really; is that it is in this relation that a person shows whether he is a good they have in them. But I believe we may learn just as well what a person is by observing his conduct in business relations. With this in mind the following topics are stated in four different ways.

Dr. C. D. Bradley presides in the Evergreen Cemetery Association. Here he manifested the greatest interest. He has charge of the lots, care of the property. No tombstone unsured for. Mrs. W. A. Granville, who died, failed to receive his prompt attention. The Board of Directors of the Gettysburg Building Association I saw him. Here he was more careful still. He looked after the loans of money then he would have been with the Building Association. The Gettysburg Association it has never had a director more conscientious, more straight forward, or more honest.

"We have fellow members of the Grand Army of the Republic, who are ready to gather and tell of the deeds of valor, the hardships and sufferings of their comrades and their misfortunes, but only once I heard Mr. Hamilton tell of what he had done himself and that was simply to relate how he had been left behind, sick, when his regiment left him. His modesty was one of his most prominent characteristics.

"As a member of the school board he gave the value of his experience to the cause of education and dedicated to the public schools of Gettysburg the best that was in him, his time and to everything that would promote the welfare of the schools, the welfare of the pupils and teachers.

"Truly he was an all-'round man."

Two features marked Thursday's session of the Teachers' Institute. The first was a lecture in the afternoon by Dr. Frank D. Fackenthal, of the American Peace Society, who spoke on the last period on "History of the War". The second was the address in the afternoon at 4 o'clock by Dr. Thomas Raymond Shannon.

Mr. Johnston is a graduate of Harvard University, is 25 years old and has made a special study of the European War. He has been in Europe but no less than eleven separate lectures, the first one being given in the first great fight here, and his talk this afternoon was one of the most interesting which the Rochester troops rendered during the battle. Special reference was made to the battle of Mons, Belgium, being large and well ventilated with a number of chairs and settees.

Another meeting of the same sort is called for next Tuesday afternoon at two o'clock at the same place, when Dr. Shannon will speak on the same subject and several hours will be spent in making bandages and dressings.

FOES RETAIN BRITISH RANK

Dukes of Cumberland and Albany Will Retain Perrogee Until War is Over.

London, Nov. 21.—The Duke of Albany and the Duke of Cumberland, two semi-British noblemen, and cousins of King George, who are fighting with the German army, will retain their British titles.

This announcement was made official today by the London Gazette, which stated that any action in the matter of depriving them of their titles would be postponed until after the war.

The Duke of Albany is a Saxe-Coburg, Leopoldine Prussian Army officer. The Duke of Cumberland is the two dukes in question he deprived of their titles, honors and seats in the house of lords.

BELIEVE SEVEN DEAD IN $200,000 FIRE

Fifteen Buildings Destroyed at Girardville, Pa.

Pottsville, Pa., Nov. 20.—The heaviest fire loss in the history of the town of water scarcity, due to the long drought, which has prevailed here, is demonstrated a wide area in the heart of Girardville.

The flames destroyed fifteen buildings and damaged as many more, until dynamite charges broke the Barker Street and the fire was kept confined within its bounds.

A letter received by the British troops and French sailors caused the Germans to abandon the trenches. Bel Aise, which is practically surrounded by the Germans, and which has withstood many guns, ammunition and food for a number of days, surrendered. The official bulletins are as follows:

"The day has been particularly calm. There is nothing new to report. Our artillery fired on the Bel Aise road.

"On the north yesterday (Wednesday) there was a violent attack directed against the right of the country's advance. The attack was repulsed with heavy losses to the enemy. Our artillery fired on the village of Bel Aise. The enemy's artillery was very active in the region of Roye and Lassigny.

"In Flanders the artillery died, directed during the day on the line of furbase intensity, has become still more violent, on the front of Dixmude at least, but here, as elsewhere the opposite forces are limiting themselves to their main positions.

An official German communication states that heavy fighting has been resumed in the Argonne forest, about which some of the most severe engagements of the war have occurred, since the time during the last two months. A heavy loss, it is said, was inflicted on the enemy. In a battle between Ypres and Dixmude the German line straight of the allies and one of the opposite forces are limiting themselves to their main positions.

FOOT AND MOUTH ALREADY RUNS

Cost of Putting Down Epidemic Great—Professional Rat Catchers Engaged.

WITH the foot and mouth disease raging among cattle in nearly one-half the states of the Union, causing a loss of millions of dollars, the department of agriculture announced that the disease is communicable to human beings, but that in effect it rarely spreads. The department stated, however, that people keep away from diseased cattle to avoid spreading the infection and recommended the use of pasteurized milk.

"What is known as the foot and mouth disease is cattle," said Dr. F. D. Mosher, a well known veterinary surgeon. "as a trouble which usually first attacks itself in small, whitish, watery blisters on the lips of the animal. These blisters accordingly are another thing the mail on a man's little finger, while they grow larger than a chestnut mail. They run into each other in time and then often are so large as a silver dollar. After a little they break and will make sore sores, some thing in the nature of an ulcer. When this happens ordinarily the sores do not go deeper than the epidermis.

"Almost invariably with the outbreak of the sores on the lip the mail will begin to drool and to dress at the mouth. Then it often ceases to eat. The sores on the mouth make mailing difficult, and it is probable that the diseased cows never chew cud. When the animal does eat while infected, hay or other coarse food frequently causes wirers in the throat.

"Shortly after the sores appear on the lips they come on the feet. They are in the form of pimples or small pinkpox about the size of the upper side of the hoof where it touches the hip. In time these pimples develop into sores and they, too, become quite sores.

"Sores are also on the udder. When they appear there is but one thing to do in this country, and that is to kill the animal and destroy the carcass and immediately and thoroughly disinfect the premises. The disease is easily transmitted, and diseased cows may be a carrier although there is no possibility of human infection. The animal must also be killed at once to prevent infection throughout the community.

Must Stamp Out the Disease.

"I have said more in not one thing to do in this country—to kill the mail. In other countries, Germany and Switzerland, the disease is prevented all the time and in one of the person their conditions of diet are a raising. As a matter of fact, in that most pa- cause country from the trouble if we chose. I should say that not more than 5 per cent the.

"Also in this country conditions are different. Cattle cannot be exported and therefore if the disease were rid of it would be prohibitive to those people about, as in Germany and Switzerland our export trade would be practically wiped out. Moreover, the inability of the mail to move from one place to another because of the quarantine, the weight almost as fast as its disposition is at a time and if the disease be to stamp prevalent with as the poundage of our beef production would be enormously cut down.

"Unquestionably the federal and state governments insist upon rigidly stamping out the disease as soon as it appears. The antiquarian of a high standard is our first aim, and one of the most reliable means of the end, is made it.

"The Chicago stockyards, the largest in the world, were closed as soon as the epidemic was discovered and remained closed for ten days. This drove the animals, which means the loss of an enormous sum of money. The loss of thousands of employees and a loss to the packers until the quarantine was relieved. Shipments of dressed meats, however, continued to be made. In fact, partly of the 40,000 employees were kept at work during the enforced quarantine.

HOW TO DETECT DISEASE AND HOW TO HANDLE IT

Symptoms and treatment of the foot and mouth disease follow:

Symptoms.

This disease is marked with a very red nose and mouth and blisters on the two toes. The eyes become clouded and then incrusted with dirt.

Starting from the mouth follows the lining up the throat. The membranes will be found to be so severed in irregular form, causing often up into the nostrils.

The animal frequently coughs in the throat.

There is a falling off in weight and in the milk in the milk the animal giver.

Treatment.

Kerosine an obnoxious quarantine to the cattle.

Do not let anyone with visions of that fairy people sin.

From the mouth bile or rotten flesh the wounds of the earth.

Dress the sores of the feet with a bottle of their birth.

Blisters of the tongue and jacket, eyes grown? start in sound quest.

Let not the vaginal commoning; all days of sense behind.

Deep within heart in hidden treasured wealth fore somewhat wise.

For of the mouth of the hollowed fountain of life.

Whatever sees smile through th' inner drops, for the sick in spirit.

High to mother gladly waiting—with some thee, my soul.

When the wind is cold an' plentin' an' the pond is frozen hard,

An' the snow is heavily gobble as they stood about th' yard;

Then's when I feels' odor feels out through the kitchen door

That's when I satisfyin' when a fellow's feelin' poor.

There's a hustle an' a bustle an' a mystifyin' air

To th' woman in th' kitchen as they shore air "bake an'" cook;

Till I better most distressful—as' I watch with wistful eye

All the appetizin' fixin's they put in their mince pie.

One by one the loaves have taken an' the last one is white meat

An' the kitties are hangin' from the eaves in mysterious places.

So I snuggle 'neath the comforts while the fire crocks, an' waves,

Bravely warrin' 'gainst the blizzard that is nearin' out o' doors.

While the wind is loudly slightin' I rejoice myself an' sleep

But soon I'm quickly wastin' for an anxious day to peep

Early in the morning, because, if the night I can say:

For I know that on the morrow mother'll cut that pumkin pie.

There's a satisfyin' thickness to that yellow, mushy mixture

The creation of a master with its faded stain of golden

An' I'm filled with dreamy rapture as he fingits a generous portion

For the ecstatic sweetness of my every nerve an' sense.

Then I'm satisfied, contentment's are but a ways to lift thrown,

Where it's nearly as much pleasure in a laughter all the away

An' I'm filled with satisfaction—though I know's a sinistere sigh

For a thought reached my forth—when my soul was that pumkin pie.

That Thanksgiving Punkin Pie

When the frost has nipped the 'simmons on the persimmon' comes down

Sets a fellow's mind a-travelin' to th' days of long ago;

When the front king's skimmerin' crystals deep on the rain-barrel below

An' mother's kitchen preserve in the cellar scattered all,

Is a feller up to just livin' is a hard as wan down fair.

It is then I look scrutated 'round the cow Novembler sky

An' wonder what's mixed with visions of that fairy punkin pie.

From the pantry-shelf hills an' echoes float th sounds of the earth,

Dreamy echoes of mother's voice of bein' to the home-like of their birth.

Blended with the happiest jacket, eyes grown? start in sound quest.

All the world is wrapped memories; all days of sense behind.

Deep within heart in hidden treasured wealth fore somewhat wise.

While the wind is loudly slightin' I rejoice myself an' sleep

But soon I'm quickly wastin' for an anxious day to peep

Early in the morning, because, if the night I can say:

For I know that on the morrow mother'll cut that pumkin pie.

There's a satisfyin' thickness to that yellow, mushy mixture

The creation of a master with its faded stain of golden

An' I'm filled with dreamy rapture as he fingits a generous portion

For the ecstatic sweetness of my every nerve an' sense.

Then I'm satisfied, contentment's are but a ways to lift thrown,

Where it's nearly as much pleasure in a laughter all the away

An' I'm filled with satisfaction—though I know's a sinistere sigh

For a thought reached my forth—when my soul was that pumkin pie.

INSTINCT TO RETURN THANKS

Feeling That Is Universal Among Mankind—Not the Knowledge of Dependence.

The impulse to return thanks to the bounty of nature has been practically universal among mankind in all ages and in all religions. It is as natural as the instinct that inspires the lodge of immortality of man's dependence upon a supreme being. It is one with the involuntary appeal that springs unbidden to the lips of all in the hour when their human help can do no more.

It is a thought-provoking fact that the one nation which set aside a day for national thanksgiving should be the people above all others most blessed with plenty and prosperity. Strangely as we may at the shortcomings of our civilization, however we may shake down the material so ordered better, we should reflect that there is no land in the world the race has there been a people in possession of more blessings and that there practically diffused abundance, with more widely distributed comfort than ours.

The problems that confront us are more numerous, more vital, with them than eventually and others as they are, but we may at the same time, the path, may be compelled to turn back to get on the right road, but of our ultimate progress there can be no doubt.

Let, therefore, each for himself and herself, return individual thanks today.

Insurance Policies must Bear Stamps, Only Six Days Time Lost in Twenty Five Years.

Gettysburg got off to a late of what the new war tax will mean when notification was received that after December 1, what is known officially as the Emergency Relief Stamp Tax, will be charged on all life insurance policies both renewals and new.

This tax is one-half of one per cent, on each dollar of insurance. This tax will be charged the assured in addition to the regular premium. The effect of the new law can be best seen when it is estimated that for every $1,000 of insurance, $5 additional will be charged.

From reports many life or endow ments of the earth,

Dreamy echoes of mother's voice of bein' to the home-like of their birth.

Blended with the happiest jacket, eyes grown? start in sound quest.

All the world is wrapped memories; all days of sense behind.

Deep within heart in hidden treasured wealth fore somewhat wise.

For of the mouth of the hollowed fountain of life.

Whatever sees smile through th' inner drops, for the sick in spirit.

High to mother gladly waiting—with some thee, my soul.

When the wind is cold an' plentin' an' the pond is frozen hard,

An' the snow is heavily gobble as they stood about th' yard;

Then's when I satisfyin' when a fellow's feelin' poor.

There's a hustle an' a bustle an' a mystifyin' air

To th' woman in th' kitchen as they shore air "bake an'" cook;

Till I better most distressful—as' I watch with wistful eye

All the appetizin' fixin's they put in their mince pie.

One by one the loaves have taken an' the last one is white meat

An' the kitties are hangin' from the eaves in mysterious places.

So I snuggle 'neath the comforts while the fire crocks, an' waves,

Bravely warrin' 'gainst the blizzard that is nearin' out o' doors.

While the wind is loudly slightin' I rejoice myself an' sleep

But soon I'm quickly wastin' for an anxious day to peep

SALE COMES TO SUDDEN CLOSE

Bell Rings to Draw Buyers and All is Ready when State Quarantine Order Brings Sale on Adams County Farm to an Abrupt Halt.

With the sale bell calling in the bidders, about five hundred of whom were assembled, and with Sheriff Thompson just ready to start his meritorious announcements, the sale of Oliver S. Senn near Two Taverns was rendered late one day afternoon when Dr. B. D. Hudson appeared on the scene and called a stop to the entire proceedings.

Dr. Hudson was acting under instructions from the Department of the State Livestock Sanitary Board where it was reported that several sales were to be held in Adams County this week and next, and where action was immediately taken to prevent them. The quarantine imposed in this county on account of the appearance here of the foot and mouth disease prohibits sales at all forms where there are cattle and it was under this provision of the quarantine act that Dr. Hudson operated.

The official ban on the big sale was a great disappointment not only to Mr. Senn and the people attending. Mr. Senn had gone to considerable trouble in preparing for the sale and some expense in advertising. Dr. Hudson explained the reason for prohibiting the sales everywhere in quarantined counties was to prevent a spread of the disease.

Persons attending the gatherings might easily spread the infection to all the districts from which they came should any of the animals develop the disease and, even though there was no sign of disease among Mr. Senn's stock, the decree of the State Board had to be complied with. It is also forbidden to sell cattle at any of the public roads, unless special permits are issued, and to ship any but for immediate slaughter is prohibited. Dr. Hudson has issued some orders for the shipment of cattle from the scores of its supply was carefully looked into. Many sales have been scheduled for this fall. Clinton Gardner expected to sell his fine cattle near York Springs on Friday but received notice not to hold his sale and Orville Riley had his sale in Straban township, extensively advertised for Saturday. Dr. Hudson notified this that the provisions of the quarantine would require that it should not be held.

AUTO ACCIDENT

Wife of Taneytown Minister Thrown out on Battlefield Avenue.

When the machine driven by the Rev. L. S. Hafer, of Taneytown, ran into a drain on the side of West Confederate avenue Monday afternoon Mrs. Hafer was thrown out and received unconscious, a friend of hers from Taneytown. She was painfully injured, while Mr. Hafer remained in the car and was unhurt. The car has the front spring broken and an axle bent in addition to other minor damages.

The party were near the Virginia monument when the accident occurred. Mr. Hafer had driven but a short distance, the park guard, and the diversion of his attention caused the machine to veer the machine into the drain. Mrs. Hafer was unconscious when picked up but was revived soon afterward. They left during the afternoon on the Gabriels for Chambersburg, leaving here the other member of the party returned to Taneytown.

When the accident occurred word was sent to Gettysburg for aid and a car from the National Garage was sent out. The many acquaintances of Mrs. Hafer will be pained to learn of her injuries.

FIFTEEN DOGS KILLED

Careless Hunters Slay Many Dogs Near Littlestown.

Reports to the State Game Commission regarding the killing of deer indicate that there will be more killed this year than for several years past. Some of the hunters, through ignorance or by accident, have killed a number of does, and thus far fifteen have been reported. The evidence concerning one of the does killed was gathered and a fine of $100 placed on each offender in the case. There is also plenty of bark deer in the forests and killing of a doe or fawn is inexcusable.

WILL GET $400 FROM RAILROAD

Was Locked in Small Building at Pen Mar by Western Maryland Employe. Indignant Man will Get Pay for his Experience.

Wilkins Bankster has won his contention with the Western Maryland railroad and will get $400 damages.

Last summer a year ago Mr. Bankster, together with W. W. Winebrenner, a well known merchant of Union township, engaged in the fish business, will use large kreeling in this section. They had learned that the American people will now have as much fish as they can consume, and as good stock can be raised in this section as in any part of the country.

The leading characteristic of good draft horses is massiveness, for their chief usefulness is the hauling of heavy loads; consequently power, not speed, is desired. To possess this power a horse should be compact, low set, or short legged, and be able to move a great deal of weight into his collar without being a severe footing. The bone of the best type should therefore be at least 1,900 pounds and in by every horse bred for draft purposes should be common any animal under this is classed as a light draft, or good driving horse.

breed, the girth large and the body long deep and compactly built, clothed with well spring ribs. The muscles of the thighs and gaskins should also be well developed, for it is these that furnish the chief driving power, the front legs acting largely as weight supporters. Feet and feet, with clean, heavy bone, are very essential. In addition the draft horse should walk with a rapid stride of good length, the feet being carried straight forward. This kind of action covers considerable ground in a short time. The ability to trot well is also desirable, but the walk is the horse's gait.

Today the Percheron probably excels all other breeds in the number of breeds combined. In fair condition a mature stallion will weigh from 1,900 to 2,000 pounds, though many exceed this. In height it runs from sixteen to seventeen hands and in color is usually black or dark gray. A flaxen or roan stallion has proved very popular. In crossing with ordinary mares, a grade Percheron are great favorites in our markets.

Loss of Barnyard Manure.

Pile up the manure of the barnyard with no protection from leaching and it will lose about one-half its manure, and more than 20 per cent of the fertilizing strength of the manure is lost. Put down a bed of earth and on that put the manure and cover it with a foot of earth occasionally, and finally when the pile is completed, cover it with a thick coat of earth. The result has been that ready where I pass over the fertilizing strength of the manure has been lost. Treated in the latter way the preserved manure has been found to yield on a garden more than twice as much as the carelessly kept and unprotected manure. If stables are used as a horse manure pile will be in the stable and the manure will be kept dry by the animals. Chambersburg Public. Manuring the manure heaps will begin in the spring. Another important thing that is useful that has been going on in the neighborhood is the application of the former.—Home and Farm Post.

DRAFT HORSES IN AMERICA.

[Prepared by United States department of agriculture.]

The best breeds of draft horses are now so well established in the United States that experts of the United States department of agriculture believe that the European war, which has interfered with importations, will not injure breeding in this country. It is believed that the American people will now have as much fish as they can consume, and as good stock can be raised in this section as in any part of the country.

GIVE THANKS FOR PEACE, SAYS PRESIDENT WILSON.

His Thanksgiving Proclamation Points Out Reasons For Gratitude.

In this year's Thanksgiving proclamation President Wilson designates Thursday, November 26, as Thanksgiving day and makes mention of the fact that the United States is at peace, while the rest of the world is at war. The proclamation says in part:

"The year that is drawing to a close since we last observed our day of national thanksgiving has been while a year of discipline because of the mighty forces of war and of changes which have disturbed the world, also a year of peace and of happiness for us.

"It has been vouchsafed to us to remain at peace, with honor, and in some part to succor the suffering and supply the needs of those who are in want. We have been privileged by our very peace and self control to some degree to steady the currents and restore the hopes and purposes of a day of fear and distress. Our people have looked upon their own life as a nation with grateful satisfaction because of the fruitful exercise of their responsibilities as well as of their blessings and a keener sense of the moral and practical significance of what their part may mean in the councils of the world may have been privileged to play.

"The hurtful effects of foreign war in their own industrial and commercial life have not been serious, and are hourly and, we are confident, will be soon overcome. And we have the further privilege to utter our counsel in the halls of peace as the representatives of a people who have sought nothing but the general welfare and the development of mankind in the ways of right and peace and who have always set human rights above property interests.

"We have been permitted to grow in the midst of the most terrible conflict of arms the world has ever seen, and to grow in strength and in the consciousness of strength without arousing the fears of our neighbors. We have been enabled to speak our own counsels and to lift our own standards of right and of duty without provoking enmity. We have been free to serve mankind at large in the spirit of true friendship.

"It is therefore altogether fitting and proper that we should, as a people, humbly offer our thanks to Almighty God for the peace and prosperity we have enjoyed and for the opportunity of service and helpfulness which has been granted us.

"Now, therefore, I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, do hereby appoint Thursday, the twenty-sixth day of November next, as a day of thanksgiving and prayer, and do invite the people throughout the land to cease from their usual occupations and in their several homes and places of worship to render thanks to Almighty God in the beauty of holiness."
